Thread: Ofc China Would Do This As Well..

Theocritus - April 17, 2020, 2:15 am just finished a few videos and articles on China, mainly about their economy.

What i stumbled over, among other things, was the notion that China has temporarily suspended the few environmental protections they had to allow factories to scale to 11, globe be damned, to get the production levels and costs to the best possible level, at the fastest possible pace.

Another interesting note here is that since international analysts cannot and do not really base their analytics on the official numbers coming out of China, (because why would they...), they instead base a good amount of their calculations of economic damage in china from this Crisis based on the pollution % drop in the country instead. Now with the few protections temporarily abolished and whatnot, this would allow factories to spew pollution levels to high heavens, which will also have the effect of masking some of the drops in the pollution levels that is used for these analytics by international bodies.

What are your thoughts on this? Do you view it as a smart decision by the CCP or do you think it in the long term will do more harm than good?

Ash Ketchum - April 17, 2020, 2:19 am

I think sometimes you just gotta accept the world is shit and do whatever you want and forget that everything is crumbling around you.

Smexy - April 17, 2020, 2:19 am

I think china's economy is quite weird and fussy.

But China also works with 5 year plans, which is quite unrealistic.

HOMODIN - April 17, 2020, 2:22 am

Hands down more harm than good in the long run. Sure it's rough now when factories, stores, borders, cities and everything is closed but it's a world wide issue so everyone has the same shit to deal with. They'll end up with an too much product compared to what can actually be exported since so many borders are closed. I mean sure, there's a backlog of product that they need to produce but that doesn't mean that the place where the product should be shipped is ready to accept any deliveries.

There's no reason for them ramp up the production with the cost of the environment, they have enough issues related to that already as it is...but hey, china is china and they don't care about the people.

this might be one of the best chances we are going to get any time soon. with the economy damaged and the country hurting in some way or form for the first time in a while, it might be enough to light the embers

If you can find/get a way to get a substantial amount of people to uprise at once make sure u inform me cause I'll happily do it and recruit others.

Mula-B - April 17, 2020, 2:37 am

This is a very smart move from CCP. They want to block the outside world of what is happening in China. It's a dirty game they play and pretend nothing is going on while trying everything they can to cover shit up. Do not forget the camps in China, they also tried to hide the camps and later they admitted it were just 'schooling' camps.

yeah but as i said there's always an agenda, look at feminist they're so far away from what their initial movement was it's not funny, people just use others to get what they want, trying to gather a mass of people who truly only want one thing and aren't just using it to get their foot in the door to get a million other things to benefit themselves is fucking impossible.

That's not really accurate. Chinese aren't afraid of their leaders, they are complacent with what they got just like us. A lot of their cities are technological wonders and most citizens live good lives. Of course they are force fed a lot of propaganda to keep their love for their country strong, but they aren't afraid. For them to revolt against Xi there would have to be a lot of outside influence and I don't see it happening tbqh, there's gonna have to be an invasion.

shitmaster - April 17, 2020, 4:27 am

I'd blame it on the rest of the world as well. Not only China. China is seen to be causing all of the pollution to bring to reality the demand of the rest of the world. Most of what is Made In China are actually exported out of China. So only if the rest of the world stop giving China the contracts, China would stop. But the rest of the world can't do that as China has the headcount to do what the rest of the world needs. It's both a win win for business/economy and lose lose for the environment.

Yup, we boosted the chinese econ by having them produce so much for us. They are already taking a step up, that's why we are turning more toward other asian countries. The Chinese are not all happy with their gov, but they can't argue that the gov is misleading them if they take a look at the economy. They are developing their cities more than ever, at a crazy rate Exactly. They have a very high potential to be world power #1. Not in the next 2 decades or so but it's evident that they are going towards that. That is also the reason why they often get into turmoil in the eyes of other nations. Just hope no war will take place if they ever go to #1.

Yeah and more chinese products are overtaking the world's production...most product available in market are definitely made in china.
