Thread: move to norway

SourceCode101 - April 20, 2020, 6:36 am

Hey guys, we have a big convertasion with my wife , to leave our country and move something better for as and our kid

We planing to leave in around 1,5year from now

I have some serious questions about norway , im very big fun of mountains,waterfalls etc also good job or to be a good business man there and open your second business

Is evryone here from norway?

Prices for rent a home?

Prices about eating fastfood,very simple and each questions

Greece is cool for a two weeks vacation in summer. But Norway/Sweden are great either it's winter or summer.

Man... Now I want to Norway. We would have to learn to speak Norwegian though.

That's pretty much the only advice that I can offer. They have 7,103 case of Covid-19 over there. Population 5.368 million. Just be safe brother, we're swimming in that funk over here in the US.

Sorry for bumping this old thread.

I live in Norway and it's not that expensive if you think about our salary's.

About the house rent it really depends on where you want to live in Norway, it can vary from 500-1000$ outside the cities and inside from 1500-5000$ a month.

Hope this is helpful.

If you have any questions about Norway just pm me :)

Norway is very nice, house prices are cheap (you get a lot of house for a small amount of money depening where you wanna go) but alcohol is expensive :P

Quote:Beer prices at a café usually start around 70-80 NOK/ 8-9 EUR. Non-alcoholic beer costs around 60 NOK/ 7 EUR. The cheapest bottle of wine at a restaurant costs from around 400 NOK/ 45 EUR.

Have visited Norway a few times for a long weekend to do some hiking/camping and it's a beautiful place. Pretty expensive though compared to other parts of Europe. Would say the rent would be fairly high there, but wages would be higher too so would make up for it. Remember paying like around 10 euro for a pint in Oslo lol. Price wise doesn't compare to Geneva though, that place is dear as hell but that's another matter lol

Prawnster - October 10, 2020, 7:50 am

From what I hear, it's a great place to visit, but living there means very high income taxes I believe, something you've probably already considered though I imagine

I'm Norwegian and could tell you about life in Norway, but that seems beside the point here. Do you have a job lined up, an education, or savings to live off while looking for a job? A job is very hard to come by without an education – even more so if you don't know the language. Or are you planning to establish a business, or move an established business?

However, if whatever you said are true, I think you're kinda screwed :P at my age, how many kids you guys are planning to have? :roflmao:

Thats true! I want 4 kids at the age of 45

But now another kid?nah!!

Before 2 days we was prepare to go vacations and i should sleep cause my place was 4h away , meh ...baby lost the whole control (but is natural)... I slept 2 h and i drive

Imagine this x2 haha

But yes i never felt more happy or i never felt more love in my whole life !

Its like you forget everything just when you see your boy/girl!

To be a father is easy !

To be a Good father and good husband is the hard part!

In Norway tax rates are high and has one of the worlds highest cost of living. Also make sure to be prepared to cold and dark times of for half of the year. Overall a safe country to live in, welcome to the Nordics.

Source bro, I've been to Norway few years ago specifically to go hiking and go to the North Cape (Nordkapp). The nature is stunning as you already know!!! I'd definitely love to live there if I had the funds. Lifestyle and everything is quite expensive from what I've heard but people also get high salaries there so that's normal. It's a high developed country after all.

A funny story I heard from a friend of mine who moved to live there is that he met his next house neighbor for the first time 8 months after moving in :D so I believe the saying that people from Nordic countries are more unwilling to socially interact between each other than people from other countries has some truth to it lol. However, if I had the opportunity to live there I'd 100% do it.

I dont know if any of your questions has been answered, and I will not go through 6 pages to look.

I live in norway, born and raised, and I have a friend who was born in norway and moved to the US when he was 11 years old.

I am now 26.

Stixio - October 11, 2020, 5:48 am

Hey dude.

That's so cool to hear.

I'm from Norway, its funny to see that someone on here is moving here.

You can rent my appartement, haha. :)

Added your discord to talk, if you have any qstions, just hmu. ?

K1. - October 11, 2020, 5:55 am

Wow Source, didn't realise you were looking at moving to Norway!

Don't know much about the place but just wanted to wish the best of luck with your search homie

Mate I used to live in Norway and I would go back there in a heartbeat. Infact, once I got work invite I'm going back to Oslo ailo - October 12, 2020, 11:11 pm

bro depends where about what city and what u do for a living.

Blockonome - October 13, 2020, 3:11 am

Do not move to Norway, move to Denmark... Sorry to say, but Denmark is cheaper, easier to get a proper job, and will help you a lot more.

Norway has the natural beauty, that is 100%, which is only a couple of hours away if you live in Denmark. Just saying.

Trev - October 13, 2020, 10:22 am

Best of luck with your move brother! I have always heard Norway is a little bit on the expensive side!

SIM-4033767 - October 13, 2020, 1:47 pm

I mean if you're from America it can't get any worse so norway is pretty good bro basseb - October 16, 2020, 4:04 am

Everything is very expensive here, you need a big budget if you want to live in the southern parts in Norway.
