So basically I just went to my profile, and everyone knows you can check the last few guys who visited your profile.

The last guy had no pic and I just head over him to see who he is and it was weird because I couldn't see his username, once I clicked on him I got to my profile with the next link.

I noticed this on some occassions as well, thought it was just my browser going crazy. There's just transparent space with nothing on it but takes space where other users who viewed you should be. Didn't clicked them though so idk where it leads but I thought it was just admins/staff hiding/not showing themselves when viewing other members but most likely not since I've seen users who were visited with admins.

Noticed that one too before, I think it got fixed but I'm not sure. Also, once you click there nothing happens.

Doesn't this means a guest visited your profile?

Oh, I see. This must be a different one since haven't seen the issue I wrote above for a while already.

Your right I have noticed the same thing for months and it has always throw me off.

Cooligan - April 25, 2020, 3:13 am

Are you talking about how there's a space in between the users avatars when viewing that list?

Actually guests can't view profile nor they are recorded as profile visitors. I've tried this before when I am logged out. It's not permitted. Keeps away leechers I guess.

even though guests can't view your profile it could possibly that someone has linked a guest directly to your profile and even though they're unable to view it, it may register on the system and just show up as a blank profile, either way it's not really anything annoying.

That is what I thought.
