Thread: Someone chargebacked me 220 USD. Am I fucked?

Wespa - May 20, 2020, 6:50 am

So the story goes like this.

I did one dropshipping sale on eBay, everything went smoothly. The shipment is going to the buyer. However, most likely because of COVID, the shipment is taking longer than expected. Now he started a chargeback on me.

The question is:

Am I fucked? Or is providing tracking number enough for PayPal agents?

YellowBeer - May 20, 2020, 6:55 am tracking is enough to win a dispute.

It's not unless you have a scan of the shipping invoice

I would wait until the package arrives at his address and then provide proof and win the dispute.

If you don't got tracking, that's bad

If it's already past expected delivery date, then RIP.

I have tracking for the product but it's past the expected delivery date.

Is that a rip?

Possibly. Ebay doesn't like when it's past delivery date even w/ tracking # and not delivered

Well that's not good, luckily I managed to get the funds out of that account beforehand so I really did not "lose any money".

Fight the case anyways explain that it arrived and provide tracking.

Provide tracking ID to paypal and you will come under paypal sellers protection.

How would I explain a shipping invoice to the Ali seller?
