Thread: Don't buy Dataprotector from user n0\$f3ratu\$

rockbottomiswhereiam - May 29, 2020, 3:36 pm

Hi,

Just wanted to give a warning to the people who are thinking about buying "DataProtector" from n0$f3ratu$.

That user has a currently open Dispute thread with a legit cause. He treats its customers like trash, has a highly rude behavior and will steal your money without thinking 2 times.

Dispute thread: <https://hackforums.net/showthread.php?tid=6082160>

Seems like i'm being taken advantage of because i'm a new member and because he has many "fake/exchanged" reputation he can do whatever he wants.

Also, some of his friends/multis (that also exchanged rep with him) tried to support him in the dispute thread trying to clear his scammy rude reputation.

As my dispute thread is getting old and nothing is happening about this situation, i'm opening a community alert thread about this user n0\$f3ratu\$

VisualSoft - May 30, 2020, 6:41 am

I agree he might be rude, but he has a good product in the market.

You can still resolve your issues with talk.

He can have a good product but he is a unable seller with some mental problems. He stole my money without reason, called me names, had trash talk..

Even after that, i'm willing to talk to him to try to resolve this situation but he just blocked me and don't want to resolve this.

I guess all i can do now is giving a warning to the community.

CPA Exposé - May 31, 2020, 7:22 am

He unbanned you and gave you a chance to use a more updated software.

You're buying a crypter for obvious reasons. This isn't Amazon. You're aren't going to get 5 star support and have your hand held in this market.

He didn't actually unbanned me, he said that after i created the dispute thread. I was willing to use another remote administration tool, but he just stole my money and banned my license.

Of course this isn't Amazon and i'm not asking for a 5 star support, i just don't like to get robbed.

No TOS terms were broken in the deal. He simple stole my money and nothing is happening to him.

He even bought a sticky, what a joke this became lol

How is even possible to allow a user to buy a sticky to promote a product that has currently open disputes?

rockbottomiswhereiam - June 12, 2020, 2:14 am

Tried to contact the seller again to resolve this situation, but he just doesn't want to work on a solution.

I guess stealing money is easier.

Oh mate this is not really gonna go very far is it. The user in question has delivered this product to many happy users for a very long time. The users who are usually unhappy are usually the ones that are new, have no idea what they are doing or do not understand the terms and break them and then complain. As much as I have never found myself to be warmed by this users attitude, the product is good for what it is and should I need a paid crypter while not wishing for for long term FUD or a private stub, this would be one that I would and have used.

As far as accusing this guy of stealing anything please consider you are purchasing a crypter to allow your unwanted malware to be unnoticed and installed and I really do not think that throwing stones in glass houses is very constructive.

The comments such as is he your boyfriend and such just indicate a lack of maturity and I personally would never deal with a user with such attitude. The say 'Don't raise your voice, improve your argument.'

As far as I am concerned your a little butt hurt and truly wish I could post gif's from my keyboard. You are entitled to your opinion and alert the community of your view but the only thing I am alerted to with this notice is immaturity.

I wish you all the best in the future and great success in life.. but I would leave this now, it's non productive

Oh and seriously please do not make assumptions of someones mental health, I find that highly inappropriate

Ok, from your response i see that you are in his favour without even read the dispute thread and without a valid reason.

"..As much as I have never found myself to be warmed by this users attitude.."

Of course not. You are an old user with reputation and you can damage his reputation if you want. Now, i'm new user that was -repped by his "friends", what damage can i make, right? He can do whatever he wants to.

"...you are purchasing a crypter to allow your unwanted malware to be unnoticed and installed..."

As i already said, the place that i'm going to use it, i have total permission to use it.

"...The comments such as is he your boyfriend and such just indicate a lack of maturity..."

Ok, i see that you replied to this thread without even read the dispute thread. I never disrespected the seller even though he trash talked and was rude since the first contact with him. Also, you noticed some of my "immaturity" replies that were directed to some users that were just attacking me. But you didn't noticed this "professional" seller language since the beginning. ???

"...Oh and seriously please do not make assumptions of someones mental health, I find that highly inappropriate...."

Ok, i can't make assumptions about someones mental health, but he can! NICE! ??

To finish, you didn't provide any valid/legit argument for him to steal my money and ban my license. I see that you are offering RAT related services, and i can make an assumption that you are just supporting him because its convenient for you. ?

7 - June 12, 2020, 3:13 am

I do love the effort you have put into this reply to be honest. Your assumptions are not correct and I am neither supporting him nor you. The product is a good product and not because it benefits me in anyway at all to be honest.

The dispute does indicate the reasons and I truly am sorry you feel this way about the sellers attitude toward you but two wrong don't make a right and surely you see this.

I was actually thinking of a way to help you achieve what you wished to achieve so your financial loss wasn't so much of a burden to you and to end this tick for tat argument that seems to be going on.

How much did you lose 25$ I'm sure we can have a whip round and come up with something. The seller does provide a good service and yes I would say he can be rather blunt and possibly rude but imagine dealing with this nonsense everyday and imagine releasing software that people expect should support softwares or operating systems that should be done and buried. His terms and conditions are stated and although he does not say Windows 3.1 is not supported I would not expect that it was.

As I said I do wish you the best still and hope you can find a solution

I feel like you brought this upon yourself, I read the dispute and it was clear he didn't want you to use a certain tool, you wanted to use it and wouldn't budge. He probably would have reactivated your license if you just listened to what he said from the get-go you would have your product. I know the developer and have talked with him a few times. His demeanor can definitely be interpreted as rude and kind of an asshole, there is no doubt about that. I've even found him rude before. But he is definitely not a scammer and he does not have friends that are multis giving him rep and posting comments on his thread. That is bullshit. He has been selling the crypter for a very long time and is a very trustworthy developer. His crypter is considered to be one of the best on the market. He would never do something like this

Well, DC is an old and quite terrible RAT, I can understand why he doesn't support it.

That being said, as a seller, he wrote on his thread that there's no support for old and unmaintained RATs. Pretty sure you could see DC and that it's 10 years old and might be considered old & unmaintained.

Even if you had doubts about it, you should have asked first if it supported DC.

But no, you bought the crypter and then later on cry for a refund that he doesn't have to give you, since it's not his mistake you weren't thinking when you made the purchase.

Demoralise - June 20, 2020, 5:28 am

DC is so well known and old that most antiviruses have their own antivirus signature and know the exact digital footprint and behaviour of the RAT to the point that runtime detection is near impossible even with a crypter. A crypter doesn't alter the digital footprint or the behaviour of the file and so those detections are there to stay. I got a crypter developed for me but my laptop completely broke down and my data is apparently unrecoverable so I lost it. If I sold that crypter I would certainly be pissed if somebody used DarkComet. Especially if they were arguing about detections

Tbh, I see why he decided to ban your licence. It is retarded to use such an old and unstable malware when there are much newer RATs like Quasar or DarkTrack which are much better options. It is incredibly hard to mask a malware that has been reverse engineered by antivirus companies thousands of times to the point that they know every single thing about the malware - not to mention it was the most popular RAT for years and therefore amongst the most commonly distributed malware on the internet and amongst the most detected malware by antivirus software. It is quite possibly the dumbest malware to use.

You should have used ASync RAT. That would have been the smartest choice.

I mean heck - if the developer of the crypter can set his software to be able to tell when a customer crypts DarkComet that pretty much just says it all doesn't it? That is how thorough DarkComet has been pulled apart. No crypter can mask that.

I can understand why he banned someone when the person demonstrates a lack of common sense and logical reasoning. Tbh I think it was very smart for him to program his crypter to detect when a customer uses DarkComet and to ban their licence. I would be concerned about my crypter gaining unnecessary detections. That is probably why he programmed it like that. It is the most likely malware to cause the crypter to become detected. It is also so stupid to use DarkComet that the customer could also be somebody dumb enough to scan their crypter file on VirusTotal. I can think of numerous good reasons for this automated banning

When i bought the crypter there was a list with some RAT that couldn't be used. DC wasn't on the list, simple as that. He can't ban my license just because i used it. Also, i have no problem in using another recent RAT as i mentioned.

DC was not on the list, sure, but there was mention of unmaintained RATs that could not be used:

Quote:Next week more outdated not maintained or poorly coded apps will be added to the list!

Why would you assume a 10+ year old RAT from around 2010 would be useable with a crypter from 2020, when you had clear information some of the RATs didn't work with it?

Why did you purchase this without thinking to contact the seller first to ask whether the RAT you are trying to crypt would work with the crypter, since he stated some RATs are unsupported and that more unsupported ones will be added to the list (therefore, acknowledging there is more than mentioned)?

You had the chance to, he didn't rob your money at point blank and run away with it.

But you didn't think about it, didn't stop for a second before buying and now we are here, where your clear lack of thought has driven you against a wall, you're out of $50 and quite miserable because of your own mistake, trying desperately to pin it somehow on the seller.. Sad.

I made a mistake when i crypted the DC server, but that didn't give the permission to the seller to treat me like trash, ban my license and steal my money. I find it funny the people that try to defend this "seller". ?

Where was on the TOS that he could steal the money if a user crypted any RAT that wasn't on the list?

PS: I also find it funny the users who are giving me -rep are the users that exchanged rep with this seller. ?

No, your mistake was buying a crypter you didn't know if it was going to work with the RAT, you should have asked seller before buying it.

Opening a dispute against a seller and trying to push this "logic" of yours against him is almost an expected service suspension, since your behavior could impact other clients of a crypter and by that point you could be maliciously ruining their business. Obviously since it's his service / product, he reserves the right to terminate it of his own volition.

Opening a dispute against a seller and trying to push this "logic" of yours against him is almost an expected service suspension, since your behavior could impact other clients of a crypter and by that point you could be maliciously ruining their business. Obviously since it's his service / product, he reserves the right to terminate it of his own volition.

The crypter actually works with this RAT. And yes, the big mistake was buying anything from this seller and i advice new users to have big caution when buying anything from this seller n0\$f3ratu\$.

I opened the dispute AFTER he banned my license. Of course i would open a dispute, he banned my license and didn't give me any refund.

I won't let this thread die and let him scam more people.

If you want to buy anything from that user, be very cautious and get ready to receive the worst customer support and very high probability to lose your money.

I don't see any point to keep this thread open. It would be nice if a mod can actually close it.

You don't see the point? People that support this kind of sellers behaviour deserves to get scammed in life.

The dispute is still open because he stole my money without any valid reason, this is why the thread is still active and not marked as "Invalid Dispute".

it's a trash anyway,it should be renamed as "Shitycrypter" in my opinion.

No I don't see the point man, sorry.

I read the convo history when you posted it ... and really you should have stopped the situation before n0\$f3ratu\$ banned your license for a second time. You should have found another RAT to use, and you should have not insisted using DC as your main RAT.

But lets say hypothetically for a moment, that n0\$f3ratu\$ did scam you. What do you, or anyone else in this case, gain if you spam both the dispute thread, and the community alert thread ? There is a history of both your dispute and this thread, so any user that is going to buy anything from him, can see the dispute, and decide by themselves if they are going to trust n0\$f3ratu\$ or not. There is absolutely no reason to continue spamming this ... and in the end of the day this behavior will just get you banned.

Community alerts are not disputes. You already have a dispute and keep the discussion there, not here.
