Thread: What's something a teacher did at school that you're still mad about?

I always hated it when teachers had favorite students. The idiots that got away with everything, then if you do something small you get in trouble.

I hated it when one of my teachers accused me of cheating when I did not do it at all. That moment has always stuck with me because it shows the authority that teachers can have where their word is almost as powerful as your own.

I had a teacher who dr?w mustache with chalk on students faces for some mistakes. Not mad about that really, but it was quite embarrassing.

I used to have this teacher that hit me with a ruler when I did bad stuff, not soft either. I'm not that mad about it anymore, I get why she did it, but it hurts like hell I can tell you.

My math teacher in 7th grade, Mr. Fenwick, a complete and total assclown. He actually had the audacity to laugh in my face because I came to him asking about the math classwork because I didn't understand. He laughed and told me to sit down.

I saw the complete @#$%-stain a number of years ago while I was at work. I said hello to him, reminded him of who I am, and he sarcastically said "I always knew you would go far in life."

I hope he's dead. I hope he died today. I want his favorite person to push him off a cliff, and as he's falling and screaming, Superman swoops him up and drops him from higher.

P.S. I credit Louis C.K. for that last bit but it sums up my feelings toward that @#$%head.

I never really had a problem with any of my teachers. I didn't like going to school as a whole, but that was pretty much it.

My middle school french teacher was a bit of work. They used to shove all my reports and projects behind one of those big metal school cabinets instead of returning them or hanging them up with the rest of my classes work. Not sure why they didn't like me to this day. Never had a teacher that picked favorites more noticeably than them.
