Thread: Do you get offended?

Wespa - June 18, 2020, 5:46 pm

I'm sure that all of us have seen how a lot of people on the internet get offended by different things.

Prime examples being:

- 1) The movie Jojo Rabbit
- 2) People realizing that Joji is Filthy Frank

Now here is my question.

Do you get offended by things that you realize/see on the internet? If so, how do you respond?

No. I personally believe a lot of people are spoiled with the ability to allow themselves to be upset by words and actions a little too much today. We live in a world that, until relatively recently, was about fighting for the right to survive. Now we can sit on our couches at home, in the AC, on our phones starting flame wars in Instagram comment sections if we so desire.

I personally have never been a big fan of complaining about these sort of things. I find it better to look back on them, learn from them, and move on. To each their own I suppose? Just not gonna spend 2 seconds of my time allowing myself to be provoked into anger by either side of such silly, pointless, arguments.

There really isn't that much that offends me anymore.

When somebody is stomping me in a game, and then trash talks me. Most of the time I'll just mute/ignore the person because I'm 25 and can't get butthurt over a video game, right? Deep inside I'm fuming.

Everyone gets annoyed on the computer at some point

i respond with anger

Yanix - June 19, 2020, 1:27 am

I usually don't give a shit on them...just don't mind them and go on with your thing :D

I don't allow the emotional states of others to affect me. It's pathetic these days that people allow themselves to be affected emotionally so much by other people's words. The fact people claim mental illness due to such things shows just how far we have degenerated as a species.

TLDR: I don't get offended, people are too soft these days.

Whaat? i loved the movie jojo rabbit! i thought it was hilarious and portraited the scene carefully yet in a good manner.

I usually dont get offended on what's being posted on the internet, most of it is non-sense anyway, shouldn't let trolls and fake media control your feelings, best is just to avoid it or know its not relevant to you and so dont get offended by what you see

The world how it is rn is shit in my eyes, people in my country as an example play the racism card on alot of advertisements or are offended by the smalles shit and the company behind it gets the shitstorm. There are way to many snowflakes out there....

I usually dont get offended and have a firm control on my temper. The only things that offend me are when I see people jump to conclusions based on their preconceived notions or just from hearing one side of the story, discrimination of all sorts and lastly a phenomenon called "whataboutism". I respond to such things with constructive criticism and I keep pointing the involved parties toward the issue at hand and I dont let them draw tangents while ignoring the core.

I don't really get offended by stuff that doesn't really affect me. I see it as a waste of energy, and I prefer to be a pretty chill person.

I'm too accustomed to how messed up the internet really is, unfortunately

People are just stupid and don't understand how to disassociate things and they get all worked up cause they have nothing else to do and or think about

Do you get offended by things that you realize/see on the internet? If so, how do you respond? Offended for what? The best solution is simply to move on.

Sometimes, I'm Gay and whenever I see anyone put out an article based on the LGBT I know that if I look in the comments all I'm going to see is a ton of Bigots and it really is infuriating to read. So I genuinely just try to avoid that stuff altogether.

(Generation X in the UK is extremely bigoted and homophobic for anyone wondering.)
