

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: Scary things that happened to you

hayesh - June 20, 2020, 3:43 pm

Guys what are some terrifying things that you have lived through

Megatron - June 20, 2020, 3:45 pm

When I was six years old and traveling with my family in Mexico, my mom got robbed. It happened so fast that I didn't know what happened at the time, but the thought that it can just happen like that terrified me. The police caught the people (or at least they caught two guys who may have fit the profile). I've been to Mexico several times after that and nothing has happened since.

HackingNinja - June 21, 2020, 6:00 am

On the day of my H.S graduation I was crossing the street and was legit 2 feet away from getting ran over by a big ole truck that didn't see me crossing.

MightyOne - June 21, 2020, 7:15 am

To be honest, it might be funny to admit but i had quite a vanilla life, so i haven't encountered anything REALLY scary or hard to go through//

Free Kurdistan - June 21, 2020, 12:52 pm

My aunt died in our house, I was the one calling the ambulance meanwhile her two young kids had to witness it as well.

Xerotic - June 21, 2020, 12:57 pm

One time when I was in 6th grade I was part of the music class that went around to local businesses caroling during Christmas time (rural South... unsure how common this is in other areas). We had just done a song on the live air for the radio. We were walking out of the building and back to the bus and I had a period where I lost my stream of consciousness but my body must have continued on as normal. I remember feeling odd walking out, blackness, and then stepping onto the bus. Maybe 30-60 seconds lost. From my perspective, my consciousness just skipped that period of time. Nobody around me was acting as if I were doing anything strange either.

Never knew what that was. The random loss of mind can be a frightening concept. Sure, things within reality can be frightening. But what happens your brain starts making it's own reality that differs from what's real? That's frightening.

Deany - June 21, 2020, 1:01 pm

Had to walk home from school when I was in middle school

I am lucky to be alive and not have my organs harvested by some pedo lol

Wespa - June 21, 2020, 1:11 pm

Once got into an avalanche while I was doing off-piste skiing in Austria, that was not fun.

Bastille - June 21, 2020, 1:17 pm

Some years ago, I took the bus to go to my work, a young girl run after the bus which was just living the station.

The driver saw here but didn't want to stop, he turned on the right, she got snapped up, everybody went outside of the bus and they screamed, I didn't look and I'm happy for that, otherwise I'm pretty sure I would often remember the scene.

She was 18 and was in the same high school I was some years ago. Damn bro, 18 years old telly - June 21, 2020, 11:25 pm

was swimming at around age 13 and it was a ymca so they had a little playground in the water, anyways, i was swimming near it and kind of pushed myself in the water and actually hit a metal pole head first. lost consciousness for like 30 seconds in the water and had to be carried out by paramedics

Bacardi Cola Lime - June 22, 2020, 1:23 am

(Jun 21, 2020 12:57 PM)Xerotic Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) One time when I was in 6th grade I was part of the music class that went around to local businesses caroling during Christmas time (rural South... unsure how common this is in other areas). We had just done a song on the live air for the radio. We were walking out of the building and back to the bus and I had a period where I lost my stream of consciousness but my body must have continued on as normal. I remember feeling odd walking out, blackness, and then stepping onto the bus. Maybe 30-60 seconds lost. From my perspective, my consciousness just skipped that period of time. Nobody around me was acting as if I were doing anything strange either.

Never knew what that was. The random loss of mind can be a frightening concept. Sure, things within reality can be frightening. But what happens your brain starts making it's own reality that differs from what's real? That's frightening.

Same exact thing has happened to me. My consciousness skipped the time where I had to jump down a fence, cross the train rails and a road. I don't remember doing any of these but suddenly I was on my door.

crixus - June 22, 2020, 5:48 am

I ran from police with few grams

Artisan - June 22, 2020, 6:42 am

(Jun 21, 2020 12:57 PM)Xerotic Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) One time when I was in 6th grade I was part of the music class that went around to local businesses caroling during Christmas time (rural South... unsure how common this is in other areas). We had just done a song on the live air for the radio. We were walking out of the building and back to the bus and I had a period where I lost my stream of consciousness but my body must have continued on as normal. I remember feeling odd walking out, blackness, and then stepping onto the bus. Maybe 30-60 seconds lost. From my perspective, my consciousness just skipped that period of time. Nobody around me was acting as if I were doing anything strange either.

Never knew what that was. The random loss of mind can be a frightening concept. Sure, things within reality can be frightening. But what happens your brain starts making it's own reality that differs from what's real? That's frightening.

I think it might have been something called Non-epileptic seizure (NES). Its brought about by anxiety or stress. Have you ever consulted a physician regarding this and did it happen again?

In my case my terrifying moment was when I was touring Kashmir. Southeast asian countries usually dont have jaywalking laws and traffic laws enforced that stringently. So I was waiting to cross the road and couldnt find a chance as the vehicles were not following any rules/laws. A buddy who was with me told me to cross at a particular moment and we were rushing over to the other side and suddenly two buses came up through the road, both racing for no apparent reason. The buses went past by both our sides leaving just a few inches of space. I thought I was a goner for sure.

L0RE - June 22, 2020, 8:04 am

Got chased with a knife a year ago, but nothing really happened. I was like the flash

Simplex - June 22, 2020, 11:14 am

Being homeless was the worst feeling for me. Always had to go to sleep carefully just so much to worry about.

Leon Robb - June 22, 2020, 11:40 am

I was very attached with my granny. She died when I was about 10 years old. After that, I saw her multiple times and I also talked her. I was not scared with this because I knew that she was my Granny and if she is here. its for my good only. Till now this happened to me more than 30-40 times.

Recently just 2-3 days back before lock down, I had a plan to visit my relative. I don't know why but I heard her voice in night and she told me not to visit them. As I always do, I followed her advice and cancelled my plan. Exactly after 2 days, that guy (my relative) got fever and tested positive for COVID-19.

.TEN - June 22, 2020, 12:06 pm

Scariest thing was getting robbed back when I worked in a petrol station. I had a knife pressed against my throat.

Leon Robb - June 22, 2020, 12:08 pm

(Jun 22, 2020 11:14 AM)Simplex Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Being homeless was the worst feeling for me. Always had to go to sleep carefully just so much to worry about.

Damn! This is really horrible. Hope you are fine now.

Scottyj01 - June 22, 2020, 12:10 pm

Someone tried kidnapping my uncle and I when I was 11 (he's only 2-3 years older than me), was an experience.

MarvinMalware - June 22, 2020, 1:06 pm

Quite a number of things in my life have been pretty traumatizing. I recall a night of drinking during my teenage years out in a local park, at the time I had been involved in some less than legal money along ways and people locally knew this. A little ways into the night I had got into an argument with a friend and decided to walk home alone, this walk required about a mile of walking through the woods. It was the middle of the night so it was pitch black outside, I remember stumbling upon a group of kids who were being a bit loud. As I tried to walk past them I heard someone call me by name, that was when I was struck over the head with a bottle, about 4-5 kids began to jump me, kicking stomping everything they could just about, took my backpack, wallet, and many other valuables (I was dumb to have even had with me in the first place) needless to say I never found out who it was and came out of it pretty beat the fuck up. A friend had found me and brought me home. Nothing a little time couldn't heal but I'll tell you it was a pretty unpleasant experience.

Skateboard - June 23, 2020, 5:33 pm

I've watched a good amount of spooky movies xd