Thread: Is Discord replacing Skype

Leon Robb - July 1, 2020, 12:41 am

In recent changes over internet, use of Discord over Skype has been increased. Do you think Discord will take over Skype?

In my opinion, In spite of being backed by tech giant MS, Discord may take over Skype. What is your view HF?

this has to be troll..

skype ended a good 3-4 years ago, if not longer.

even for video calling, zoom was the preferred method over Skype.

Semmenial - July 1, 2020, 12:54 am

Discord is mainly for casual conversations for gamers, etc.

I've seen and continue to see Skype growing to be used in business situations. If anything Zoom could potentially replace Skype for university students.

Some of you need a bucket wrapped over your heads.

Many people still use Skype, I think you will find nothing has changed. Discord has been quite active yes but Skype will continue business as usual. If they weren't getting much traffic it wouldn't operate.

All goes on personal preference.

P.S still trying to work out how to mention people.

I personally think Skype has a strong presence still. While Discord may be the new favorite on HF and many communities like it, I still have yet to find a person offline or online (in regards to business-related things) where Discord has ever been mentioned. Zoom and Skype seem to be the most preferred, with Slack being the enterprise-level platform for teams and corporate.

I personally like using Skype over Discord for business-related things, but I could see how Discord would be preferred over Skype for chat related things, gaming, etc.

That's not true at all. Skypes overall activity has completely died down over the years and even for businesses they are transitioning to alternative platforms. As for "If they weren't getting much traffic it wouldn't operate.", that's also not true. Skype is owned by Microsoft so even if it dies down by 50% they'd still keep it up because that's just how they are. I'm amazed mixer lasted as long as it did. In 5-7 years, I wouldn't be surprised if Skype closed in general.

No doubt Skype will still be around for a while, but saying nothing has changed is just false.

Correct. I've had 1-2 instances on some 1-off based dealings where someone invited me to their Slack to communicate with multiple members who were already well acquainted with Slack on a daily basis. Aside from those weird encounters, it's predominately Skype & Zoom.

That's definitely what it seems like. Discord has much more features, and doesn't take as much resources as skype does and has in the past. Communication apps usually get bodied when they don't change with the generations that are coming.

Well I agree with you for that "Everything that microsoft touch = burns".

P.S - They have discords but they don't use it so often.

Here some info about Discord:

Code Discord is spyware because it collects all information that passes through its communication platform. As Discord is a centralized communication platform, all communications have to go through Discord's official servers, where all of that information can potentially be recorded. The vast majority of said information has been confirmed to be recorded, such as all communications between users. Discord has also been confirmed to use other spyware features such as various forms of telemetry. Discord's main source of income is from investment, from which it has received over $279.3 million dollars[4]. Discord cannot be built from source and the source code for Discord is unavailable.

Discord does not make its source code available

It is impossible to download and examine Discord's source code, which means that it is impossible to prove that Discord is not spyware. Any program which does not make its source code available is potential spyware.

And yeah, why would you talk about anything that "Spyware" would catch online anyways? ?

Well I would say win 10 is OK and not great. The shit thing is that they force you to get better PC bcs the OS don't support old parts and etc.

About the "Spyware" I just mention it.

Absolutist - July 1, 2020, 2:13 am

I refuse to make the switch. Skype is fine

Exposed74 - July 1, 2020, 2:15 am

Discord is on the rise, Skype on the downfall. The only thing keeping Skype above water is that some people doesn't want to change their habits. And corporations are worst on that.

The thing is, we want faster tools, more userfriendly, and easy to manage. But I would not really compare Discord and Skype. Since the purpose of Skype is only to voice or video call, whereas Discord not only offers this, but also servers, which can come handy. It's closer to Mumble/TS than Skype, but on a more userfriendly approach with the link to connect to a server and stuff like that Completely and utterly. I'd say businesses would even be better using Discord for calls. I set Skype up a few weeks ago to get a family call going so we could see everyone, the lag was so bad that we switched to Discord and it worked fine. Ah. Now I get this. People who don't dive much in internet may have not heard about it.

During lock down we have witnessed, for work from home, many companies had a list of apps and Skype was one of that.
I have seen this too but adobe connect seems to be booming more than Skype in the work environment though.
Discord I haven't seen much for business like at all.

Connected - July 3, 2020, 5:07 pm

Skype is honestly dead. Discord replaced Skype a LONG time ago.

In my opinion, In spite of being backed by tech giant MS, Discord may take over Skype. What is your view HF?

No one uses Skype anymore honestly

A + - July 3, 2020, 9:56 pm

I'm pretty sure that ship sailed a long time ago brother.

Euro - July 3, 2020, 9:58 pm

Skype's a ghost town these days. S'all about Discord

Agreed Pawnhub

Discord has been seen more for casual activities. For Professional communications, Skype, Adobe was more preferred.

I don't like Skype, had few issues, discord is far better option.

Hero - July 5, 2020, 6:27 am

Skype is shit and should have fixed their IP leak problem sooner. Now discord took over.

Vichenzo - July 5, 2020, 6:50 am

Discord already took over Skype. Still Skype was great for its time but times change obviously ^^

Uberref - July 5, 2020, 12:12 pm

Yeah! I think discord has replaced skype.

MightyOne - July 5, 2020, 12:50 pm

Skype is jist way too much out dated.

Not only that, theres now microsoft teams and ahit ton of other services that akype is just NOT relevant anymore.

Xen - July 5, 2020, 3:09 pm

Skype has a strong presence in some companies. My workplace still uses it for phone calls and IM. But we're transitioning to Teams for group conversations.

Method - July 5, 2020, 4:42 pm

I see some of you still defending Skype as a whole. Yes people (mostly businesses) still use it but they are transitioning over to other platforms, and fast.

Nate - July 5, 2020, 9:57 pm

Yeah I can definitely say it is, I don't even use my skype anymore. I don't think I've logged into it since 2016

I remember back in the day skype was everything, had big ass group convos, group calls

It was fun, especially with the HF skype groups
