Thread: FREE EBOOK - Quality of Quantity race betting - my personal guide

Hello Fellow Punters

If you have opened this thread it is because you are a bit of a gambler like me - but unlike me you probably don't have a winning system. Well I do have a winning horse racing system, and I am going to give it to anyone who wants it for free.

To help out those that are struggling to pick a winner I am providing you with a system I use myself - one that is very simple and highly profitable. It doesn't generate a lot of bets - but it does generate a great return on investment!!

Don't believe me - here are my results from a little over a years worth of bets:

Results: Tested January 1 to February 29

29 races bet on

Strike Rate: Win 44.8% Place 62.1%

Average win dividend: $5.39 (for each $1 bet) Average Place dividend: $2.32 (for each $1 bet)

Win betting profit on turnover: 141.7%

Place betting profit on turnover: 44.1%

As I said, it is not a lot of bets, but the bets are quality bets!

So I am sure you are asking why I am giving this away if it is so successful? There are three reasons:

1. I know most people who download the e-book will never implement it, and even if they do you can't saturate this method given the amount of horse races there are each year around the world
2. I am new to this forum so was looking for something to give back and establish my credibility
3. I have more products in the pipeline that are far more exciting than this one, so hopefully those that do try this system might be willing to invest in the next one :)

Some of you may want to know how long it takes to generate winning tips with this system? Well it took me about 15 minutes today to handicap each race in Australia for Saturday 18 July 2020. Admittedly I have automated the process (although I did do the tips mostly by hand this week to see how long it would take), and I am pretty experienced in selecting the system. But it should take no more than 2 minutes a race on average even for a beginner provided you have a decent form guide.

Speaking of beginners, you may be wondering if you need to know anything about horses to make this system work? Honestly, the less you know the better - personally I couldn't even tell you the difference between a thoroughbred and a donkey just by looking at it! I find those that know a lot about horse racing often make terrible tipsters. They tend to let feelings get in the way of common sense. As for me I just stick to my rules and let the maths do the work.

Seeing as I have done the work for the races in Australia for the 22nd of July you may be asking do I have any winning tips for tomorrow? Well the results are below:

Across all racing in Australia for 18 July, 5 horses met the early criteria. These horses took me 10 seconds to identify as I used an automated process - I only did the first stage with automation today.

normally the whole process is automated for me. But the best way to test that I had written down the steps correctly was to do the rest of it manually.

So I applied the rules manually, and I am glad to inform you that of the 5 horses initially identified there was a total NO no horses that met ALL criteria, so I won't be betting tomorrow!

Why am I glad to inform you that there are no bets to be had in Australia tomorrow? Because to me it proves that this system is all about quality, not quantity when it comes to bets. I could lie and tell you that I have dozens of bets each week and they are all winners, but that would be garbage, often I don't pick a horse with this system. But when I do, they are good quality bets.

But for those with an interest in a bet there is horse that did almost qualify for a bet - so I will share it here (before the races have been run) just in case anyone is interested:

In Victoria at Sandwon-Hillside, Race 1 Number 1 McCain almost made the grade but didn't meet one criteria. It had a winning percentage of 50%, which is too high a winning percentage for this system. And yes I know it is weird to exclude a horse because it's winning percentage is too high, but I have a good reason for that. PM me if you want to know why I excluded this horse.

So no bets for me tomorrow, but I'll check the results just to see how this horse went because I am a curious how it will perform. I'll also post Saturday's Australian tips in this thread if anyone is interested.
