Thread: Omegle Bot | Very fast | Proxy support | Designed to run 24/7!

b0untyhunt3r - July 29, 2020, 4:19 pm

I wrote an omegle bot for advertising a discord server I co-own but am putting it up for sale now because it looks like there's a market for it.

Features:

Multithreaded

Lightweight - Completely requests based. A cheap VPS can run many threads easily. The most I've tested was 32

Built to run 24/7 on Windows, Mac, and Linux

Can send messages with multiple lines - I can add a message randomizer in the future

Prints the omegle events - You can see things like stranger actions (messages from strangers, disconnects, typing) and common likes (which topic(s) the bot and the stranger matched on). I haven't added an option to turn this off because it doesn't impact performance. I can add this and other features if they have enough demand

Logs the number of messages sent and the number of messages without stranger disconnect

Supports HTTP proxies - I can add SOCKS and user:pass support if there is enough demand

There is no UI. You need access to a good proxy pool but definitely doesn't have to be expensive. The proxies I use cost under $10/GB. I can do more than 50k messages with 1 GB. There is a limit to how many threads are effective. I got spam complaints with 32. Someone said they got a bunch of my messages in a row. 4 threads seems to work well (Depending on proxies). It doesn't spam enough to piss people off more than they are already with ads but still gets good traffic. On an average day the server I'm promoting gets 50+ joins. Unless you are using a very large list of public proxies, I don't recommend running with more than 6 threads (Once again, depending on how many unflagged proxies are in the pool you are using).

It can scrape for public proxies but only looks at one source currently. It will get a few hundred but almost all public proxies are abused already. Generally not worth it. I may update the proxy scraping in the future.

I'm no longer selling ad services, just licenses for the program. Each come with access to all future updates

$12/week, $40/month, $400 Unlimited

If you purchase unlimited, I can add some custom features for you but they can't be crazy requests. I'll also share which proxy pools work for me. I'll always be looking for more.

Probably but I'm not up for that work at the moment

Your price are too high... omegle api are pretty easy to reverse (also public, bots everywhere), the real problem is to find residential proxies (really expensive) to spam with decent amount of threads (50+).

Without proxies your prices are huge, good luck with sales.

p.s. I was running a bot with private proxies included (residential) and I had similar prices to yours

p.s. I was running a bot with private proxies included (residential) and I had similar prices to yours I've found cheap providers that work well (I talk more about them in OP). These prices are based off of a few threads I've seen in the marketplace selling omegle bots and I have still marked them down.

PretjeNL - August 6, 2020, 2:38 pm

I have been running the bot for about 2 days now and i must say it runs pretty stable. Currently run it with 100 threads wich does the job.

Even though as earlier mentioned for the proxies, i am able to run it just fine with public proxies. No issues with public proxies for now.

Havent tested it on my VPS yet, but should not be able to run 100 threads as my VPS is pretty crap.

Thanks for the feedback. I'm happy public proxies are working well so far. I use a $5/month VPS from digitalocean to run a few projects and it's able to handle the bot at 200+ threads. That was just for testing. I don't keep it at that because it was with paid proxies and would cause too much spam and irritate people.

Clients are still having success but there are more problems. It's always been hard to tell if messages drop because of proxies or keywords. I think they've just added more keywords/domains to their blacklist. And proxies probably get banned faster because more bots are running and using the same pools. No doubt they've perm banned entire ranges, but I think they still temp ban a lot of the proxies bots would use (residential/mobile).

FYI, a simple way to check if your messages go through is to open 2 clients and put an obscure/random interest so you can match with yourself. They can be 2 tabs in the same browser window

How were you able to bypass the captcha in omegle?

b0untyhunt3r - August 18, 2021, 10:08 pm

(Aug 18, 2021 09:12 PM)T911 Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) How were you able to bypass the captcha in omegle?

There isn't a problem with captchas because once the bot hits one, it goes to the next proxy in the list and attempts to start another chat session. Using something like 2captcha isn't cost effective for most because it'd cost you $3/1000 chats and, from my experience, getting the response usually takes about 30 seconds.

Also, just made this thread for some domain tools you might be interested in:

I can't recommend a service but it only takes HTTP proxies currently. You should only use residential or mobile as datacenter proxies are likely flagged already. Make sure the services have a good refund policy because most pools are polluted. Rotating is probably fine but sticky with a rotation every x minutes/seconds is better because each chat session takes multiple requests and with rotating, the IP changes on each request. Rotating still seems to work and is easier to find support for. I don't know how much of a difference the IP changing during the chat makes on Omegle's end. If you're doing the sticky configuration, you should have many ports/IPs in the proxy file to keep the bot busy until the rotation time elapses (before the thread goes back to #1 in it's list).

Hi I am interested in buying. But I need to ask these things:

- I never was able to find working proxies. Can you help me with it?
- I need function to define language, is that possible?

If these two requirements would be delivered, I will buy lifetime access. Please DM me.

Sure, I can do both. DM'd you. I increased prices several months ago btw:

$15/week, $50/month, $450 lifetime

Still doing a %5 discount for BSV
