Thread: I quit my Job and called them clowns.

Zeus - August 1, 2020, 2:00 pm

Been stressed over the past couple months and got ill from working this job i've been working at for 9 months, they where messaging me bugging me and i told them i was ill and they even seen there selves when i went and tried to go in for 2 hours and was going to pass out.

I finally quit today.

Here is what i said,

It was pretty bad job but got me through the day, something to do get me out the house but the hours where ridiculous.

Thank god i'm finally out of this job and i feel much better now.

Zeus.

Good shit for standing up for yourself. Hopefully u find a new and better job :)

Angela White - August 1, 2020, 2:05 pm

Now figure something out to start working for yourself instead of having to work for a clown.

I applaud.

Cooligan - August 1, 2020, 2:06 pm

I've worked at jobs like these. When the managers are constantly trying to force you into doing tasks that are completely outrageous and tasks that they would never do themselves. Telling me to speed 20mph over the limit in small neighborhoods on the weekends "because it's not that busy so you'd probably be fine". Incompetent managers are probably the worst thing for a workplace.

Good for you dude. So long as you're able to supplement that income in some way, you'll be fine.

Plus, there's plenty of places that are virtually mass-hiring right now due to corona.

You'll be good brotha <3

I do wonder what his reaction was though ?

A + - August 1, 2020, 2:07 pm

Well done brother. There is a difference between being a hard worker and being taken advantage of.

Lol. I can tell now that what people say is in fact true. I typically won't believe much of what others say about others, however in this case it turned out to be very true.

The fact that you included "personal self development" as if that's what I was implying in anyway, shows me that you clearly battle with that topic already.

It's crazy how much someone says about themselves by the attitude they portray.

See how quickly you switched from the one trying to get under my skin, to now defending yourself?

My point has proved itself.

Oh, and something funny I noticed. You mentioned I was up Zeus's ass or something like that. Well one I'll say in no way I am, he's just a good friend, and if you actually had a conversation with the guy once you just might realize you were wrong about something. I don't foresee it happening though.

And two, this is all meanwhile you have the Asskisser award with the description of:

I am in a similar position, but I am not ill just really tired of the job because it's so repetitive and I just don't have anymore motivation, going to hold on just a few more months to get a bit more stable and look for something else, but before going back to work I need a holiday to relax.

I just quit my job too. My boss was an a$$ and the unrealistic expectations he had with a major lack in hourly pay just made it not worth it. I was the top performer too and really carried the place I worked at, it wasn't worth me busting my a$$ anymore though.

Also, I had more than enough money saved up to quit and focus on other things.
