Yeah I don't think wants to take the chance of possibly bringing back a community like that. They play it safe.

Doc has been just streaming songs for an hour, don't know if he's ever gonna come on stream.

I may have to tune in but curious to see what all the fuss was about the ban.

Bacardi Cola Lime - August 7, 2020, 4:05 am

He bamboozled everyone and let them watch a gas station for an hour. He then tweeted that he's going live the next day. What a legend.

Doc has been just streaming songs for an hour, don't know if he's ever gonna come on stream. Most of those people don't just quit watching twitch cause they ban a particular streamer, so those communities just migrate to other channels.

Like what?

Yeah I watched a bit of the livestream once I noticed he was live

Hope Twitch or Dr disrespect come out to say the initial reason he got banned (unless they have then can someone please link me something that leads me to it)

I was watching his stream earlier i think YouTube is a better platform for him and his followers as subscribers can watch his previous streams on VOD as they couldn't via twitch.

Mango™ - August 12, 2020, 9:02 pm

Dude made more money streaming a fake gas station for 2 days than I will in 3 years working.

racooweeeesucker69 - August 12, 2020, 9:07 pm

He streamed few days ago, was crazy he had like half a mil viewers I couldn't believe how big he's gotten.

tbh that was just a bunch of people hopping on the hype train of a big streamer being back so they can say they were there. Same thing happened when T1 returned to league of legends. I expect he'll avg at 20-30K again, which is still insane.

These dudes making insane bucks playing games and fucking around, it really it seems unfeasible.

Yeah, puts a lot of effort into his production though. Tbh I don't watch doc often, but his production is next level. And he seemed a lot happier streaming on youtube, either that or he was just extremely happy to be back.
