

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: Lowest, respected time to work at unwanted workplace?

Bossk - August 8, 2020, 12:56 pm

I have taken a job at a fast food joint alongside studies due to covid, but Im really not happy at my workplace. I want to quit, but it's tolerable to quit a job less than a month after being hired.

I will give it 3-4 months until i leave, is that reasonable?

RIP Juice WRLD - August 8, 2020, 1:01 pm

1 shift.

If you're like "Fuck no, this ain't me", then quit right away.
There's tons of jobs out there.

If you're like ... "Meh", I'd suggest giving it a couple of shifts first.

SIM-3587630 - August 8, 2020, 1:04 pm

Honestly depends if you need that money badly, a toxic environment at work will make you feel bad, work bad, and more in the long term. I'd say quit asap.

Artisan - August 8, 2020, 1:09 pm

(Aug 8, 2020 12:56 PM)Bossk Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) I have taken a job at a fast food joint alongside studies due to covid, but Im really not happy at my workplace. I want to quit, but it's tolerable to quit a job less than a month after being hired.

I will give it 3-4 months until i leave, is that reasonable?

Definitely reasonable. Just give them notice before you leave. You might hate the workplace but that doesnt mean you cant leave on good terms. ?

Bossk - August 8, 2020, 1:11 pm

(Aug 8, 2020 01:01 PM)RIP Juice WRLD Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) 1 shift.

If you're like "fugg no, this ain't me", then quit right away.
There's tons of jobs out there.

If you're like ... "Meh", I'd suggest giving it a couple of shifts first.

(Aug 8, 2020 01:04 PM)Kendrick Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Honestly depends if you need that money badly, a toxic environment at work will make you feel bad, work bad, and more in the long term. I'd say quit asap.

I hear you and I would like to. But I want to quit on good terms with my boss which is why I will stay and later come up with some lie why I can't continue working there.

RIP Juice WRLD - August 8, 2020, 1:20 pm

(Aug 8, 2020 01:11 PM)Bossk Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) I hear you and I would like to. But I want to quit on good terms with my boss which is why I will stay and later come up with some lie why I can't continue working there.

You could literally just say "This job isn't me - I'm quitting, sorry for the hassle."

Ble$$eD - August 8, 2020, 1:26 pm

If your not happy with 8 hours of your day there, then I would quit. Why sit there and be miserable and annoyed.

SIM-1232764 - August 8, 2020, 1:59 pm

(Aug 8, 2020 01:04 PM)Kendrick Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Honestly depends if you need that money badly, a toxic environment at work will make you feel bad, work bad, and more in the long term. I'd say quit asap.

Exactly what Kendrick said.

GregClone - August 8, 2020, 2:07 pm

Ive had jobs where i quit on the spot

Dopamine - August 8, 2020, 2:24 pm

Bro don't tolerate this job if you don't like it.

Already quit job back in the past after 1 shift lol

Pawnhub - August 8, 2020, 7:08 pm

What you should do is getting used to job hopping.

Just because you found a job doesn't mean you'll be happy with it like your situation.

What I do which doesn't matter how long you held your previous job.

Step 1. Find a job

Step 2. Make relations at said job

Step 3. Evaluate the job to see if it's making me happy/enough money.

Step 4. If one of the above isn't true start looking for a new job with higher salary or what I'd like to see in this business.

Step 5. Get a few interviews and see if the job looks more valuable to me than my current.

Step 6. If the new job is serious about hiring you, and you like it put in 2 weeks at your new job or just quit outright. (depending on if you're management was even respectable enough for your 2 weeks notice) let your new employer know and give your old boss the news.

This is also how you break out of a decent job and start making a better opportunity for yourself. Same rules.

EG. I been at a company I love but they haven't given me a raise or I don't feel like I'm going to leave this position (Not getting promoted) I'll use these same steps.

I have former employers sad to see me go but proud to see me actually striving for more and understand that I'm not sticking around for the scraps. I'm still great friends with a few and they always put in a good word for me as references. Met a lot of valuable people along the way. This is how you break ground in the employment world.

Given you're a hardworking employee ^^

Here's some fucking jams for when you find that better opportunity.

[Video: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=p5XtvhR4oUY>]

Imagine going to 5 interviews being hired to 3 of them then telling 2 to eat shit the first week and work with the best option.

This is more normal than you expect. You're overthinking employment. It's a game meant to be played.

Nima304 - August 8, 2020, 7:10 pm

Just don't put it on your resume. It's not like anyone will care if you didn't get fired and didn't work for more than a month.

Spiritual - August 8, 2020, 10:42 pm

Go fill out an application at a staffing agency im sure you can find a better job within the week and quit. if I didn't like the vibe of a job I just left

Stig - August 8, 2020, 10:43 pm

(Aug 8, 2020 01:04 PM)Kendrick Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Honestly depends if you need that money badly, a toxic environment at work will make you feel bad, work bad, and more in the long term. I'd say quit asap.

This. And yeah, I would give it more time man.

Fortunate - August 8, 2020, 11:01 pm

How bad do you want the money? If it's vital then I'd say around 1-3 months but if you don't need the money, just leave after the first shift.

(Aug 8, 2020 10:42 PM)Spiritual Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Go fill out an application at a staffing agency im sure you can find a better job within the week and quit. if I didn't like the vibe of a job I just left

Not really a fan of staffing agencies just because they'll put you in a similiar spot. Yes, you'll find a job but that most likely won't fix the issue.

Bacardi Cola Lime - August 9, 2020, 1:04 am

My friend only lasted a month before quitting. He couldn't take the bad behavior of the bosses and the small salary.

Caustic - August 9, 2020, 1:05 am

If you don't desperately need the money, quit and find another job.

Demize - August 9, 2020, 4:54 am

(Aug 9, 2020 04:51 AM)Doubt Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Even if you leave on bad terms, does it really matter? Doubt they're going to try to track you down to make it harder for you when life's currently tough for everyone + doubt you'll ever see your boss again anyways.

This is only matters if you need to use them as a reference

?roye - August 9, 2020, 4:55 am

I don't think you should stay and try to like the job for 3-4 months, that'd be a waste of time and energy, I'd give it 1 month tops. Good luck anyway, OP!

gore - August 9, 2020, 5:00 am

When I was 19, 2 weeks into a new job I got a better job offer so I put in my 2 weeks that day lol.

Fast food is used to the turn around, if you're not happy there just put in your 2 week notice and leave.

(Aug 9, 2020 04:51 AM)Doubt Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Even if you leave on bad terms, does it really matter? Doubt they're going to try to track you down to make it harder for you when life's currently tough for everyone + doubt you'll ever see your boss again anyways.

If you go for a great job later and they want your work history for the last 7-10 years with contact info, it'll matter. Who knows if they remember you really, but if they do... yikes.

(Aug 8, 2020 07:10 PM)Nima304 Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Just don't put it on your resume. It's not like anyone will care if you didn't get fired and didn't work for more than a month.

If you've gotten a pay check there and the job wants you to pull your work history from the social security office, it'll show up.

Government jobs do things like this lol.

