flavoral - August 12, 2020, 3:57 pm

Everyday we start doing new stuff and new bobbies.

What's something that you wish you started doing a long time ago rather just now?

Fortunate - August 12, 2020, 3:58 pm

Learning to code with Swift and create an app with my brother.

Its still out there on the table, I should maybe start doing it.

Not even learning it earlier, don't even currently now how to code for shit other than for the basics.
You know how to code?

raccoonweeweesucker69 - August 12, 2020, 4:01 pm

Two things, one was coding and the other was training, this may be my only regret.

Had a shit diet as a kid while doing tons of sports exercise (running, football, tennis) so was underweight as opposed to overweight despite being really fit from the waist down. Finally got around to working out once COVID hit after having fixed my diet a couple years prior and results have already been immense. Would recommend to anyone.

i wish i'm able to maintain the same level of workout as i used to be.

I sort of wish I studied finance when I was younger, but that's a bit unrealistic, so maybe drawing, I've always hesitated on starting when I was young because of how untalented I was, compared to others, only on my 20s or so did I realize that hard work can also beat talent sometimes.

Acrid - August 12, 2020, 4:05 pm

Coding (obligatory)

Probably learning to play an instrument. Would love to actually know how to play guitar.

Also learning a second language. Currently in my first week of learning Russian

I wished I had learnt how to invest, stock market, etc. Also being responsible and having a savings account since my early teens and putting a fixed amount of money away in a bank account monthly for retirement. I imagine how much money would be there now if I had started way earlier.

I remember being a kid and being able to run for long distances without it being an issue, as I'm aging I'm seeing limitations I don't like so need to force myself to do it more regularly and benefit from it!

I wish I would have paid more attention in school early on so I would have a much smoother time than I currently am. I mean, I'm passing right now but if I paid attention sooner it would be a lot better. Secondly, I wish I would have gotten serious and followed through with getting help with my addiction. I'm sober now but it really couldn't have hurt if I had gotten help sooner. Thirdly, I would have buckled down and focused on finding more suitable jobs, unlike the ones I have had in the past. Fourthly, I wish I would have cut out the toxic "friends" a lot earlier because I allowed them to hold me back.

I wish I would have pulled my head out of my ass and got help with my addiction much earlier than I did but that's a relatively normal wish. Otherwise, I wish I would have begun the process of pursuing and bettering my education when I was younger. I was too chicken@#$% and pessimistic about IF I would be accepted, but never actually tried until earlier this year.

That's what everyone thinks, but you probably would've sold at a 500-1000% gain and not rode to today's price :)

Sure is, why I have $10,000+ in it currently.

While I don't see it going to a 2 billion dollar return I see 1 btc being worth $100k average within 5 years.

I also have a fair amount in BTC but took omni's advice and put a fat chunk in ETH to sit for a year at least.

I see eth going up only if the new projects with it continue to grow. It's a little risky imo.

I'd recommend looking into SmartTrade (a service here on the forum that's free to start)

I personally wish I started doing the following earlier in life: Acting more professional (I.e. Dressing for the job I want), running and networking. Instead, I played video games, hacked runescape accounts and lurked on Hack Forums for years. Sure, I made a lot of money from it. But, I don't have anything from it anymore.
