Yes, in the method I am selling.

OfficialLemon - August 12, 2020, 9:56 pm

Vouch copies? Would be happy to take one and leave a review.

You are the second person to ask in the thread, 4th all together.

I am not giving any vouch copies away, but perhaps give a small discount to a buyer who would like to leave a review.

Well, if you are skeptic to this, then you could always hang on and wait for a review to be given.

If you are interested in some nice premium 3 character domains, PM me about that.

The domains have to be purchased through PayPal, or a CC, it wouldn't be too hard to have someone buy for you and just transfer it straight to you right away.

What are the 10 domains that you bought using this method? That should enough proof that your method works.

Yes, but like I stated earlier, I am purchasing for people at 3.75$ a pop for .com etc, for they are not on here.

I am not sharing the domains, if you would like to get this method, either purchase it or await a reviewer.

Not to my knowledge, I have never heard of that at all, where do you have to wait 60 days to transfer a domain?
Most domains have a security lock on them and an auth key that is shared with the receiving name-server.

Regardless if that is the case with other sites, I have never ran into that.

When you register a domain (gTLD) or transfer it to another registrar (usually your web hosting provider), the domain will be locked for 60 days. During this period the domain cannot be transferred. It is part of the transfer policy from ICANN and applies to all registrars.

Yes, you can change the DNS and make the domain available for another service.
But, NO, you can't transfer the domain to another service without the 60 days passing.

Verdande - August 13, 2020, 12:25 am

Due to a large amount of people wanting a vouch copy, I decided to sell it as a re-seller method for one person.
I am currently doing OK with buying the domains people request for 3.75$, and I have some nice premium domains for sale too.

I do not want to upset anyone or cause any drama by picking favorites, so if anyone knows about how to do this, it would profit us all by me not sharing this, as people are selling TDL's at a discount.

Thank you for the interest!
