Thread: What is the biggest emotional regret of your life?

Aisun - August 27, 2020, 11:58 pm

I'd like to know something that happened in your life that you deeply regret.

Not something like how you should have bought BTC when it just came out, but rather something that affected you emotionally.

Hi OP, maybe it's a good idea if you share your's too.

I was really hurt when I found out my ex was cheated on me :(.

Vitani's Mate - August 28, 2020, 3:53 am

Being fucking born.

Biggest regret ever!

Vibe - August 28, 2020, 3:56 am

Cheating on my girlfriend in high school has had an emotional effect on me. I sat back and looked at it all and analyzed my actions and realized how much pain I caused someone, and I hate being the cause of that.

Regulus - August 28, 2020, 4:16 am

Dropping out of school is one of my bigger regrets.

Focusing on regret and the past aint do any good. So I have no regrets.

Bacardi Cola Lime - August 28, 2020, 8:07 am

Not caring about my family for a long long time. I was a stupid kid.

Pawnhub - August 28, 2020, 8:28 am

I regret giving terrible people the time of day, while pushing away the people I loved.

Dealt with bad drug addiction when I was a lot younger and I was influence by a girl that played me hella hard.

Ended up with a multitude of problems emotionally and physically and got arrested on multiple occasions in a far range like robbery, battery, assault, theft, destruction of property etc.

Very rough time of my life. Not my proudest that is for sure but that's what happens when you're a dumb kid who did stupid shit.

Glad that time of my life ended a couple years ago but I won't lie about it, I was lost and the regret's of what I did still haunt me to this day.

Nobody needs to hear about dumb rl scenarios that wouldn't mean anything to them, so here's some of my crypto upsets,

Participated in the Ethereum ICO. Deposited $1000 into the ICO, which valued each Ethereum at $0.35, giving me about 2,880 ETH. This was roughly 1 week before I was due to be sent off to prison, and I let a friend convince me that having that $1000 in cash would be a lot better for me than chancing it on crypto and potentially coming out with nothing to my name.

The day I got released that $1000 would have been between $30,000 and $35,000. Later that month it would have been over $120,000. Later that year it would have been worth north of $4,000,000.

Panicked and intentionally deleted 21 BTC when they were about $500 to $550 each.

3.

Was bringing in $1000-$2000+ worth of BTC every month while BTC was valued between $5 and $100, as well as mining 2-5 coins a day slightly before this period. This was some of my only income though, so I was rapidly selling it for a currency that I could use to pay my bills. Really wish I held on to even 10% of it.

4.

I've been involved with BTC since it was sub $0.01. I got lucky, stumbled across it early, and became fascinated. Being one of the earliest adopters of BTC, one would expect me to have large reserves of coins and be very wealthy. It wasn't until a couple of months ago that I was even debt free.

Haha, that'd be a good idea!

I grew up with a broken family. I grew up in denial that I was affected by it, but eventually as I grew more mature, I realised it wasn't wise to run away from my problems, and all the pain that comes with it.

I thought it through, reflected and eventually came to terms with this fact, and now I believe that I'm in a better place now.

On the side of the story that you shared, it's extremely unfortunate that you had to go through that, but at least you found out early and left that. It is a sad and painful thing to go through infidelity, especially if you really loved that person a lot.

You're in a better place now, I hope!

At least you actually sat yourself down to reflect, and in turn becoming a better and more mature person.

Good on you!

(Aug 28, 2020 04:16 AM)Regulus Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Dropping out of school is one of my bigger regrets. Damn, what was the reason for it, if you don't mind sharing? Was it just a childish mindset, or did it give you too much stress?

Either way, nothing is stopping you from going back! Maybe you could focus on building a portfolio first and getting the funds to put yourself back in school, or even find out if the company you work at has any resources to put you back in school! Many companies has policies that reinvest resources into their personnel.

(Aug 28, 2020 04:29 AM)trashy Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Maybe lose a lot of time with the wrong girl idk, I dont really regret something, nobody should do
That's a good motto to live by!

I always tell my friends that something "regrettable" shouldn't really hold much power over you because at that point in time, it was something you wanted enough to actually do.

Either way, I'm happy that at least you would have learnt one thing from that event in your life, so good on you!

(Aug 28, 2020 04:59 AM)Doubt Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Not spending enough time with people before they were gone, probably.

Loss is tough, and you should be proud that you had the strength to power forward and continue living your best life for them!

(Aug 28, 2020 05:20 AM)Real Rudy Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Probably being so violent some years back. Now I talk about it instead of fight about it.

That's great character development!

I too struggled with anger management and in turn getting into a lot of fights back in the day. I'm pretty lucky that I haven't gotten any run-ins with the authorities given how many people I've had a scuffle with, but hey, at least we reflect and learn, right?

(Aug 28, 2020 07:02 AM)crixus Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Focusing on regret and the past aint do any good. So I have no regrets.

I think a lot of us grew up and matured late, and ended up making poor decisions earlier on that in time, affected our lives greatly.

Regarding responsibilities, one thing I learnt was that learning to say no greatly gave me more liberty and freedom. I felt less tied down when I stopped being a yes-man and people-pleaser.

I hope you get the things worth your time prioritised so that you can have a better one!

Thank you so much for sharing your story!

There is something endearing when you hear someone who shares about their past that they're not too proud of, and see that they've repaid their dues and done the necessary reflection, in turn becoming a better person.

It's tough getting manipulated, and even worse so when you are left in the dark. So in a sense, there is a silver lining that you are no longer following that girl who was clearly bad company like a little puppy!

Hopefully you can come to terms with that being apart of your life so that you can start living your life to the fullest again!

No such thing!

Many people have this mindset, but not many know that it's not a great mentality to hold onto; And it is this exact thing that is holding you back!

I might not know your full story, as I'm just a stranger on the internet. But if I could tell you one thing, it's that you should focus on yourself and slowly learn to improve and love yourself for nobody else but yourself.

The moment you grow more independent in your mindset, you'll slowly become a better and more confident person, and eventually someone will see you for who you really are.

You could still try to make it up to her!

She might have negative feelings towards that event that happened as she might be feeling embarrassment from being plan B, but that doesn't mean that you can patch it up!

Tell her about your genuine feelings, and how you made a mistake and hopefully she would still accept you as a friend.

Good luck!

Biggest emotional regret of my life? Too many to count. I guess i'd have to say the time I committed 2 burglaries and got arrested with 12 felonies and 5 misdemeanors. I was a young teen getting into the wrong shit, so it was a wakeup call and probably was for the better that I got caught early on. Who knows I could be some loser stealing people's shit right now instead of pursuing a degree. Still regret doing it though.
