What a clown show we live in today, we've got white saviors like the RGB and anti-hero destroying local businesses because they wish to protect a crack head with a knife.

It isn't safe anymore, I'm already looking into buying body armor and a rifle for the unknown in the future.

13uNkNoWn - September 15, 2020, 12:26 am

This is an idiot with a knife.

the people protesting/rioting for him are either idiots or extremists of some sort.

But sure, assume I defend every piece of crime because I care about accuracy and preventing mob mentality which devolves into violence.

Attribute every terrible thing to all the protesters, peaceful and otherwise, continue to push BLM as only a terrorist organization.

You're just screaming in your own echo chamber.

Mr I never said who the RGB cat was on this thread but if you want to self incriminate that's up to you. You're still a White savior using POC and attempting to paint the BLM as a peaceful movement.

Anybody coming at me with a knife, I will shoot them immediately. No questions asked.

SIM-4704770 - September 15, 2020, 7:57 am

This isn't a clown show lol, this is just showing that people shouldn't charge police officers with a knife. This gets you killed. If you have a guy sprinting at you with a knife and you have a means to end his charge wouldn't you try to use it or would you rather try to calm him with soothing words then get a knife to your gut.

I'm not even a conservative or right leaning at all this was just completely justified whoever is protesting this is protesting the intent of murder on a human I, regardless of his occupation.

While I agree this is the only way this situation could have been handled properly right now by the police?

That is kind of the problem people might be upset about too...

How about instead of one or two cops with nearly zero physical body protection for themselves, and lethal weapons?

send two cops with riot shields instead...

Can't stab them... and he gets smashed in the face and goes to jail instead of dies, nobody riots.

That same idiot had done the same only a year prior and actually stabbed 4 people, why was he even out within a year?

Are you living in La La Land? the whole point of the cops having guns is for them to have a 1up or 1:1 ratio. Riot shield vs knife?

Figures, the only solution simple minds can come up with is shoot to kill.

Not smart enough to figure out ways to prevent this stuff?

Revert to cave man days, use force, kill em all.

I guess there has to be some job for the modern cave man who wants to shoot.

Sure go shoot all the criminals, you'll end crime that way for sure! lol

Only way to "end" crime is to revert to the old days where mob bosses actually had control of organized crime and worked quid pro quo with enforcement.
Situations like these are spontaneous and happen out of nowhere, riot shields and anything of the sort isn't "standard" equipment either, could that change? Possibly.

Regardless, this was 100% a justified shooting.

Not sure what else is expected when you charge a cop with a knife. Maybe if you're lucky he uses a taser but if an officers life is in danger it is justified to use deadly force

We don't shoot to kill. We shot to eliminate a threat. Sometimes 2 rounds gets the psychological compliance needed. Sometimes it takes 17 rounds to get the physiological effect. Police aren't trained to "shoot to kill". It's "shoot to eliminate a threat".

Just bash them in the face? Have you ever been in a fight a day in your life?

I don't care you can think about a fight all day long, plan it, pump yourself up etc IT WILL NEVER BE LIKE YOU IMAGINED.

You truly do live in a fantasy world where a 1 on 1 macho match decides if a cop or criminal is in the right.

Nobody riots? Why should anyone be rioting in the favor of this dude? Shot or not dude made his choices to bring a lethal weapon to a fight, he could have come out and talk to the police but the FACT is he didn't. He chose to be the aggressor, he chose to attack the officer and he chose to break into his mothers house and bring out a lethal weapon.

You want to talk FACT's on why BLM is bullshit?

Black people are 13% of the population, yet commit 50% of the crime and that correlates to more shooting of said black people because there's more interactions with police vs criminals. If you compare the population of white people who commit crimes and get shot to black people that commit crimes per population it's not disproportionate like the media say it is or your SJW commie friends. There's been numerous debates on this and we can link you to the posts on HF.

And systematic racism is a joke on how white people somehow have privilege by birth when. ALL the SJW nonsense breaks down with these facts right here.

- >> Privilege is wearing $200 sneakers when you've never had a job.
- >> Privilege is wearing $300 Beats headphones while living on public assistance.
- >> Privilege is having a Smartphone with a Data plan which you receive no bill for.
- >> Privilege is living in public subsidized housing where you don't have a utility bill and where rising property taxes and rents and energy costs have absolutely no effect on the amount of subsidized food you can put on your table.
- >> Privilege is having free health insurance for you and your family that's paid for by working people who can't afford health insurance for their families.
- >> Privilege is having multiple national organizations promoting and protecting your race that's subsidized by federal tax dollars.
- >> Privilege is having access to a national college fund that supports only your race.
- >> Privilege is having a television network that supports only your race.
- >> Privilege is the ability to go march against, and protest against anything that triggers you, without worrying about calling off work and the consequences that accompany such.
- >> Privilege is having as many children as you want, regardless of your employment status, and be able to send them off to daycare or school you don't pay for.
- >> Privilege is having most of your life paid for by the people who DO HAVE TO DEAL WITH RISING TAXES AND COSTS!
- >> Privilege is having the benefit of the doubt when being shot during a violent attack and having protests in your name before the facts come out!

You can disagree but the whole left follows this nonsense and if you feel like bashing trump when SJW stupidity is the leading factor for the democratic party, you are making a dumb decision. The left is nothing but a sad joke.

The logic behind these protests is fucking retarded. Keep spewing your trash because that's all these protests is based on.

Let the two sides split the country and say fugg off to each other. I can literally link you tons of videos on police being killed from all over the world by unhinged people attacking them you think this "trained" or not matters when it comes to being fucking killed in the line of duty.

In that case no country shouldn't be able to lose a war, since all soldiers are trained right they couldn't possibly be killed or wounded if attacked.

Just because you receive training you will not be able to stop all attacks either knowing ahead of time or not from anyone. This is why cops take this shit seriously, this is why the military takes this shit seriously even prison workers and anyone dealing with a possible direct force of attack. How many cops are simply hit first or didn't have time to react? Almost the entire fucking time. And you blame them for shooting someone with a knife who's charging them at first sight?

This is exactly why you are delusional and probably talking from a perspective of BS. "Oh with good training cops will be able to 1v2 a person who is attacking with a lethal weapon with riot shields." Take the 2 officers shot and killed during a traffic stop a few days ago when trying to get a man out a vehicle, no clue he had a gun and couldn't react.

send two cops with riot shields instead...

Riot shields are expensive, unwieldy, and get in the way of just about everything else you could or would want to do as a doughnut eater. Generally only city departments (places where riots are likely to happen) have enough to field a section of their people, and usually those are locked up someplace, and not out on patrol. And arguments like yours are why the cops everywhere are now generally armed with tasers and pepper spray as well.

But I would also like to point out that you can't have it both ways; defunding the police while also have twice the number of cops, with even more equipment to use--especially equipment that requires additional training which requires more man hours which increases the costs of the police. If you want more cops, and better trained cops, then you need more budget to pay for those cops, as well as the training those cops will need to get.

This. When working in a security force, such as the police or military, you match force with force, and depending on the circumstances, you are authorized as a standing order to escalate the force applied in a reasonable manner in order to maintain control and dominance of the situation. In situations involving assets vital to national security, or assets not vital to national security but inherently dangerous to others--such as nuke/big bombs or nuclear reactors--or other seriously grave threats, lethal force is essentially the only force. And sometimes, if/when you're involved in foreign affairs, lethal force is only authorized in defense of self, or prevention of death or grievous bodily harm to others is the only reasons for lethal force' which can make the job a lot harder.

When someone presents a threat and lethal force is justified, you shoot to stop the threat. On an unarmored/normal human body, there is basically a triangle between the two eyes and the middle of the upper lip that stops the threat immediately. A high-velocity lobotomy is the only way to stop a threat immediately. There is another triangle, between the nipples of a male and the middle of the throat that will stop a threat after they bleed out, but that still takes about 30 seconds assuming you get a hit in the heart or one of the major arteries in that area--and there are plenty of records and evidence of people being shot in/through the lungs and/or chest cavity and living through the ordeal. If that threat is armed, they can easily raise a weapon and empty most magazines in that time frame, so the best practice is to shoot until they are obviously down and dead.

Cops don't have the same training as the military, and for good reason; but they do have the same protocols when it comes to protecting lives that the military does. But even though I was not a 'front-line' or 'combat' unit, I still know that I have more trigger time than many cops I've met. I think that's something that should probably change. I'd like to see cops spend less time writing tickets, and more time training; I'd say probably 20% of their time, or something like a day a week, or a 4-5 days a month should be spent training. And not just on the range behind the trigger, but also more time spent in combatives, judo, jujitsu, wrestling, and probably some first-aid/medic and mental health training. I think that time would be well rewarded by making officers more confident in their abilities, and more capable of de-escalation when situations arise.

There are protests, and there are riots. Whenever a protest turns violent, or creates other unlawful conduct, it ceases to be a protest, and then becomes a riot.

That is simply accurate framing. Not bullshit. Threats to cops as just as real as threats to other people, if not more so. Because we pay cops to act on our behalf to protect us. People know this, which is why when cops show up, any threat a person may present to other people or property will often shift focus to the cop. Because that is their job.

That's not anything I've claimed.

The law decides who is right in court.

Not anyone else.

The more tools/weapons you want the cops to carry, the more training they will require to be proficient in them. This is especially so for simpler items such as batons and shields that require significant training and practice to become proficient and develop the muscle memory to be able to use them properly. And simpler items also suffer from the compounding effects of strength, so that a significantly stronger person can overcome a weaker person wielding a baton or shield, regardless of the training. Throw a knife in the mix, and it quickly becomes too problematic to match force to force, so force escalation becomes required. Disabling tools such as tasers or pepper spray can remove much of the finesse and control a person wielding a knife can have, but they are still lethally dangerous, so using lethal force is still justified. And asking officers to tote around a shield and a shotgun in addition to everything else they already carry is a bit too much. Aside from not being able to reliably use either while the other is being employed, they get in the way of doing just about anything else.

And honestly, most cop training barely meets the standards for being called training. Because it's cheaper that way, and because any time cops spend in training is not time cops are writing tickets to generate revenue for 'the state'. And when you consider that there are a number of places where a significant portion of the 'state budget' comes from the revenue generated by the tickets written, the whole thing being a bit of a scam starts to become more clear.

You're quite clearly an idiot who doesn't really understand half of what you're talking about.

This is a clear cut case where the police have 100% justification. So anybody you see protesting this or outraged about this you can just dismiss as deluded or a troll. We will not get anywhere defending the indefensible

You could be the damned chief of police and I'd just as confidently state:

When it becomes comply or die you stand a very real chance of being in the wrong, and you need to accept that.

Was Daniel Shaver being non-compliant?

Mentally challenged and deaf people are also killed by police when they can't comply properly.

Non-Compliance does not = guilt.

No matter what any "trained cop" or whatever similar to that you are tells anyone.

People that are given the weapons and permission to shoot people?

Need MUCH MORE and BETTER training and access to more tools to prevent the need for unnecessary death.

It has never been 'comply or die'; that is the rhetoric your side is trying to push, as evidenced by all of the retardation that has happened and gone on in the riots.

It has always been, 'comply, or get forced to comply'. Things like pepper spray and tasers help coerce compliance through the use of shock, pain, and discomfort. They also often cause people to 'freeze up' allowing officers to expeditiously gain control of a subject.

Things get complicated when you have to deal with mental incompetents or the mentally incapacitated--whether through accident or misfortune of birth or drug use is largely irrelevant, unless you happen to know that the subject is probably on drugs, and more specifically which drugs, which can yield probable reactions to an officer's attempt to force compliance. A stoner, for example, is generally far less likely to produce a realistic threat than someone on crack, meth, pcpc, or cocaine.

And your example is really just an attempt to shy away from facts, logic, and reason, to utilize emotionally argumentative tactics. Cops are NOT about deciding guilt--that is the job of the prosecutors, judges, and juries. Cops are "Law Enforcement"; which means that their job is to go out into the community and evaluate situations to decide if there is enough evidence for potential criminal activity and potential charges to be filed, and detain/seize the people involved, investigate and write reports of their observations and investigations, and then hand that package off to the prosecutors who are students of the law and officers of the court, who then judge which exact charges are to be filed and to what degree, whereby the judge and jury evaluate everything to determine innocence or guilt, and then the judge determines the appropriate sentence for the crime. LEO's are administrative agents of the executive branch, which works in conjunction with the judiciary or judicial branch, and they are kept as separate as possible for good reason.

Because of this, compliance with the LEO's is necessary, even if you are innocent, but might be looking suspicious. Sometimes good people get put in bad situations, and have to make quick choices. Sometimes those choices are right, sometimes they are wrong. The judge and jury decide that. But compliance is still necessary, and compliance often makes the whole process easier and quicker, and even if wrong decisions were made, compliance often helps out in the end if some kind of sentencing is deemed appropriate; guy gets a fine rather than jail time, or gets time-served and probation or something like that. But people die when they resist violently or get aggressive attempting to resist compliance. If you're a bigger guy, you learn this early on in life if you have any encounters, because your sheer size and strength constitutes a potential threat, compared to a female or much smaller individual who can more easily be overpowered and manhandled. It isn't about cops trying to be judge, jury, and executioner; it is about cops trying to keep the town and streets safe from potential threats; because that is the job they were hired to do by We, The People.

The Daniel Shaver situation says otherwise.

"Things get complicated" was the closest you came to addressing this issue.

I guess the next time someone is killed who couldn't comply due to being deaf or handicapped in some way, the police should just respond as such: "Things get complicated shrug sorry your daddy/mommy/brother/sister are dead. should have listened."

How is using the example of Daniel Shaver, or a deaf/handicapped person being killed, moving away from facts, logic or reason?

In the Daniel Shaver situation, cops were responding to a call about someone pointing a rifle out of a hotel window. From the 2017 Las Vegas shooting, we know just exactly how nasty something like that can be. So of course the cops would send in a SWAT team or SWAT-like team to a call about that. It would probably be one of the most dire and immediate escalations imaginable. And of course, the officers are going to be fucking juiced when it comes to their response.

And here you sit, criticizing them for their misunderstanding or misinterpretation of a situation that you would never find yourself in, and even if you did, would still probably fuck up somehow. People aren't perfect, and they make mistakes. Cops being people, aren't perfect, and they are going to make mistakes. It is a tragedy, and one that probably everyone regrets. Because some dude got drunk, and did something stupid like point a BB gun out of a hotel window.

And then think about the cop, who has to live with the fact that he lit up and lobotomized a guy for being a bit too stupid while drunk in a hotel room talking with friends about what he was doing at work.

Uhm, no.

I suggested cops need more training to handle situations better, because the current methodology leads to situations like the examples I described.

Then here YOU sit... criticizing me, for saying the police force isn't perfect, and suggesting they need better training and tools.

But then your response is... what again?

Dude, you are trash just trying to argue with me because you don't like my point of view.

Yet everything you keep saying, contributes to exactly what I'm saying.

The police aren't perfect, there is room for improvement, they need to improve.

Stop trying to be argumentative and "prove me wrong" when you are actually agreeing with me but just don't want to admit it/believe it lol.

Oh and for all your ranting? you never answered this:

Nothing in your responses, addresses your false claim, that me using those examples, is moving away from facts, logic, or reason.

Typical of people like you to call me out for something, trying to discredit me, but then change the subject when directly asked about it.

All bullshit aside, I don't like living with such things existing.
