Thread: Funeral

Mr. Tycoon - September 15, 2020, 4:31 pm

I was looking at funeral arrangements out of curiosity. As it's something I've never had to think about, but I thought to myself that I don't want to leave my arrangements to others as they won't truly know what I want.

The first question I was asked was "buried or cremated" then I had this huge moment of deciding what was right, a thought was, well, I'm dead. (At the time of it needing to matter, duh) but seriously, how do you get past that step? "Pros and cons" of being buried:cremated?

Artisan - September 15, 2020, 4:35 pm

Depends on your religious beliefs really. If you are religious and your doctrine says you should be buried then go for it. Its eco friendly, feeds the soil when you rot and you get good deed points. If you arent religious then pick whichever one you want coz you clearly have the freedom to choose. There'd be a lot of smoke and smog if everyone decided to get cremated though (sorry for the bias).

Mr. Tycoon - September 15, 2020, 4:39 pm

I'm a Jew by default though by nature very much nothing. Had never followed my "roots" of such and for me, I'll be dead by that point. I was wondering though, if we "feel" anything. I know it's ludicrous really, but I'm afraid of the burning but also afraid of the dark and cold.

soultech - September 15, 2020, 5:02 pm

I also think it has a lot to do with beliefs (religion, family, society etc..)

From experience, the time scale for each is very different for the ones left behind - A burial is usually completed pretty quickly (days or weeks) and the body is buried, and kind of done and dusted - A cremation can be over a year before you have to scatter the ashes.

Both have their pros and cons, and opens up more questions - Is it better to get it over with so they can move on and begin to deal with loss and grief or is it better to let them do it in their own time?

I have a friend who lost his mother a few years ago, and she was cremated - It took his sister over a year to get to the point where she felt strong enough to scatter the ashes and finally let go, most people felt it was too long and she wouldn't let go and it stopped her from moving forward. Who knows?

She finally agreed to scattering the ashes after the doctor stepped in with bereavement counselling and she was gently pushed towards a healthy direction.

So yeah, its a big multi layered thing to ponder when you begin to go deep into it.

I do ponder this too and have never come to any perfect solution lol - Think ill just leave some cash and whoever's here can decide what they would like to do, its them who be dealing with it after all lol

EvilCauses - September 15, 2020, 7:44 pm

such a morbid top i havent thought about it but while your there get life insurance ?

MarvinMalware - September 15, 2020, 9:38 pm

I mean this is definitely a personal decision it's whatever you feel is right. I personally think I want to be cremated, just something about being buried that creeps me out.

I agree to this brother...some do want to be cremated and some other don't want to because of their religions and the teachings they have.

Free Kurdistan - September 16, 2020, 4:58 am

I don't have a single reason to get cremated and I would never choose it no matter what.

PokeBong - September 16, 2020, 5:01 am

Personal preference... I'd prefer to be cremated so my loved ones can have me with them instead of being stuck in the ground..

Regulus - September 16, 2020, 5:36 am

Just dump me in the ocean or in the sea and I'll be happy lol.

I agree with Artisan. I think it's more of your belief/religious...

Mr. Corleone - September 16, 2020, 10:31 am

Honestly don't care.

My family and friends both share different religions.

I know that even if I choose how my funeral will go, it will not go the way I want.

Blogger - September 16, 2020, 10:51 am

Being cremated is a lot cheaper, but being buried gives your loved ones somewhere to grieve and a lot of people need that. I think those are the biggest things to consider.

SIM-4033767 - September 16, 2020, 9:26 pm

Being buried is better imo cuz you get a tombstone and a place where you can visit etc

jecoylecay - September 17, 2020, 1:17 am

If you're a Christian Mate, it's better to be buried.

Not anything, as I said - I'm genetically Jewish, morally I don't associate with any religion. My dad was cremated because my family hated the idea of him being buried in the cold soil with bugs. My dad wouldn't have cared because he didn't care about life as such.

He had no wishes as he committed suicide and his ashes were scatted a few day's later on the beach where he would often roam when having an manic depressive episode.

I have no family in a sense, was the black sheep of the family and ran away at 16. Haven't seen my mum in nearly 10 years, so for me I have no idea or care in what happens but I'm intrigued in the more non religious or moral aspect and the more personal fears of what happens to you guys after death

Do you have preference on weather to be buried or being cremated?

blkchain - September 18, 2020, 3:29 am well, these days it's even more complicated. there are even more options than just bury or cremate.. such as human composting and Alkaline Hydrolysis (look it up)

?ystem - September 18, 2020, 10:29 am

It's kind of easy for me to decide because being buried costs a lot more than a simple cremation, and I don't want people to suffer monetarily over my untimely passing.
