Thread: After Food Poisoning

MrJamesDean - September 16, 2020, 11:15 am

I had really bad food poisoning over the weekend, pretty sure some brisket I ate made me real sick even though a buddy ate the same and had no problems, but I'm not kidding you when I say it was some of the worst pains I've felt in my life. I've had logs fall on me when working at a lumber yard years ago, been cut up by a sander that malfunctioned and got a bad wound, but this shit was insane. Felt like I'd been smashed in the stomach by a bunch of sledgehammers or stomped on, and while I'm a lot better now I'm still feeling like shit. Anyone else been through this, and know any secret tips to alleviate it? I'm just in crazy amounts of pain and painkillers only help so much. Appreciate any feedback!

The last time I was food poisoned was from some pizza buffet. Go figure, they are unsanitary as fug.

I was always afraid of the same. Luckily I haven't experienced that so far. Speaking of which kebab buffets are the same

The place we went to is always super clean, and it was service brought to the table, full PPE and everything from the dude who brought it over. My buddy was totally fine too which made it weird because I don't know for sure it was the brisket. I'm just still in pain and feel sore, like even going from sitting to standing up is giving me some serious pain, it's crazy :(

It's honestly crazy isn't it! Never felt such bad pains like that in my stomach before. Hopefully only a day or two more of this then it's back to normal!
