Thread: How are you handling COVID?

duane - September 16, 2020, 6:38 pm

Hello HF, long time no post.

I hope all of you and yours are well in this new world we're in.

I just wanted to check in with you all to see if you have any personal experience with COVID, and/or how are you handling everything?

Wishing you all the best

You're fortunate.

It definitely doesn't seem to have the attention compared to earlier this year.

What country are you in? (if you don't mind me asking)

USA. Florida..

We have to wear mask but everything is open... almost like normal bit we get mask now.

I thought Florida was one of the harder hit states initially, glad you and yours are all healthy!

It definitely seems like no one cares about it anymore, kind of sad & strange.

It's almost past 6months now since Covid was being hitting our country.

Since the very beginning we are really doing lots of precautionary methods to avoid catching the viruses and still now we are doing the same thing.

Vitamins is really essential to boost our immune system and we are not going to places that are necessary whenever going out.

Pretty well, spent some time with "infected" family members, everyone looks fine, either we are asymptomatic or the tests suck ass and show false positives.

I am handling covid by staying at home with my family. If I got outside, I wear face mask and face shield. I also staying away from people outside as much as possible. That's the general rule during this time of pandemic.

Sadly here in Netherlands, most of the people are ignorance, parents picking up their kids in front of schools chatting to each other without mask, no mask inside the supermarkets, parks are full of people last August, no wonder the second wave is going now.

When I used masker inside the supermarket, other people are staring at me lol.

It's kind of just been an afterthought now. I still wear a mask in public buildings because of the mandate.

I'm moving where there are no mandates/restrictions in a few days, and when I visited and went into the shops there was basically no one wearing masks.

Just looked like normal pre-covid stuff there.

At first I felt a little overwhelmed, it has been difficult not being able to go out like before or see the people I love. But little by little I have learned to accept the situation and I try to relax at home, I use this extra time to read, meditate and talk online with other people, since I do not gain anything feeling anxiety. There are good days and other worse ones, but in the end you get used to it.

I haven't tested positive and I don't know anybody that has. I've just experienced the usual stuff, certain places closed but are open again. Lots of mask policies and that sort of thing. I managed to stop drinking during covid which is a good thing, also started making some money online. That's pretty much the extent of it.

Never have I been hit with covid nor do I know anyone that has been hit with it as well though my sister's co-worker has been hit with covid and they had to close so many departments on that area people here take it seriously that a single person affected by it will be put into quarantine and would end up spending 14 days alone but in general dealing with covid is not that bad for me personally, since playing games and being in the internet has been a huge factor for me to keep sane

I haven't got COVID however some of my friends have and I've been cautious about it, I definitely don't want to go through the scares of getting COVID its nothing we can just shrug off it comes back if we forgot about the restrictions.

Screw this covid because it's a hoax

ITheSlayer - February 15, 2021, 8:37 am

We don't have much cases here so life is basically same as always.

Pretty well considering the fact my power is back on hahah. But for real I am waiting for this stimulus to get that vendor upgrade

Welp in the end I caught it as well...

Mild or Severe infection:

Very mild

Symptoms:

Coughing, Harder to breath, Fever, Headache, Snug, Neck Ache, No smell, No Taste.

Risk Zone:

Highest (Born with heart disease)

Hospitalized:

Yes, for one week, since it was a very mild infection I caught (Luckily), I was able to go in quarantine at home instead after a week.

Nothing happened personally to me, but I'm mentally exhausted.

Also, Tokyo imposed a business hours limitations... to be honest it feels weird seeing a bar opening at noon and closing at 8pm, and those girls bars also working at day time feels weird.

So in conclusion... what happens in Tokyo is that every goes out at daytime instead of night D:

I think I'm doing a pretty good job handling covid. I just hate forgetting a mask and having to turn around or make one out of my jacket. lol

I know the feeling.... here's a tip: leave a new mask in the pocket of all your clothes, thereby when you forget to take one you have a spare. You could also save someone's day if they forgot the mask and you hand them a spare one.

After forgetting my mask a few times, I started leaving all of my masks in the glove compartment of my car. Saved me so many times.

I realised today that I'm coping a lot better than most of my friends, and it's quite sad. I was talking to a few today in a group chat, everyone's finding it really tough and trying so hard to keep it together, I feel bad for saying I'm okay sometimes.
