

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: google phone trace

AllahVaSuddin - November 2, 2020, 9:58 am

Whats up guys? I'm pretty new to forums in general so please forgive me if I sound like an idiot. Thanks.

Anyway, For the past week someone has been using a google number to text my spouse and feeding her crazy stories about me. I won't go into too much detail but it seems I have shit on someones parade and its coming back to me.

When I try to call the number, it cannot completed as dialed. Is there a way to find out who is sending the messages or if yall could reccommend a good place to read up on this because I cant ever get google to find what i want so any help is appreciated.

Thanks

EDIT: When calling the number, it actually says "The google subscriber you called is not available" then gives me an option to leave a message.

Thanks for pointing that out Noodlez_

Noodlez_ - November 2, 2020, 4:45 pm

(Nov 2, 2020 10:58 AM)AllahVaSuddin Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Whats up guys? I'm pretty new to forums in general so please forgive me if I sound like an idiot. Thanks.

Anyway, For the past week someone has been using a google number to text my spouse and feeding her crazy stories about me. I won't go into too much detail but it seems I have shit on someones parade and its coming back to me.

When I try to call the number, it cannot completed as dialed. Is there a way to find out who is sending the messages or if yall could reccommend a good place to read up on this because I cant ever get google to find what i want so any help is appreciated.

Thanks

Weird as it should never "not complete as dialed" unless it's not an actual routed number. In your case it will route to Google's Servers. Try putting a +1 in front of the area code.

Unless it's also a spoof number which you would have to contact your phone service and have them investigate it. (Highly recommend)

Google also rarely works with law enforcement to find the offender on any identifying features and instead will just close service to the account for a harassment case.

AllahVaSuddin - November 3, 2020, 11:07 am

(Nov 2, 2020 05:45 PM)Noodlez_ Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Weird as it should never "not complete as dialed" unless it's not an actual routed number. In your case it will route to Google's Servers. Try putting a +1 in front of the area code.

Unless it's also a spoof number which you would have to contact your phone service and have them investigate it. (Highly recommend)

Google also rarely works with law enforcement to find the offender on any identifying features and instead will just close service to the account for a harassment case.

Thank you.

So I tried adding the +1 and the best I can come up with is it is someone in my city... That is a lot of possibilities. Without getting too many parties involved, is there something i can do myself? I've done the obvious step of questioning of suspected persons but I can only do so much until word spreads. LOL I might sound paranoid but I just want to keep this issue under rocks. (man that sounds like I did something terrible) I just like my privacy.

Would you know where I could start looking to maybe find out how I can find out myself without service providers or anything? I am willing to do the research and put in the work but I can't find anything except sketchy paid services.