Tyr - November 7, 2020, 10:59 am

"Trump promises we will never hear from him again if he loses to Biden," at a rally in Kentucky awhile back. The irony.

Think he'll live up to his promise? Technically it's over, but apparently Trump and his legal team are going to take this one out past the bleachers it looks like by contesting the results. No surprise there of course, as we knew this would happen for months now.

For the record I am a registered Independent. I am also fiscally-Conservative. So to those who are making presumptions about my political affiliation, there ya go. Don't judge a book by its cover.

Trump will most likely try to take it to the Supreme Court. He already started legal action in a couple of states. I dont think that will change anything but, he will not go out of USA.

Responses like this show the emotional weakness, instability, and inferior maturity of the OP and those alike. They win a bloodied, battled out election by small margins and immediately take to the airwaves to boast. If they would have lost they would immediately take to the airwaves to cry and riot. Pathetic. I double down. I work harder, take care of my family all with a smile on my face knowing that Trump destroyed any and all chances of the radical lefts agenda.

And the sad part is Biden most likely won through fraud. I don't see anything good coming from a

Biden presidency. What is his agenda? He ran on being anti Trump. He has no clear policy positions, he's literally a Trojan horse for the Democrats.

His sister is on audio saying she did most of his homework, that he paid someone to sit his SATs and that he started off at an inferior college before the family begged him into the better one part way through his degree which he never talks about.

Hey don't shoot the messenger this is just what his sister says when she was secretly taped by his niece. His sister also said on the tape that she thought he had absolutely no morals and no scruples. (She was upset about the kidnapped kids.) You can hear those tapes on YouTube.

But what I heard is that all this "greatest fraud election" stuff is a pitch so he can get money from people saying he needs it to uncover and reveal the greatest election fraud in US history and then he can use the money for all the law suits he's going to be hit by and his current debts etc...so yeah if this is true don't get scammed.

Some people think he may eventually make Pence president so Pence can pardon him if he's hit with any criminal charges.

This is everything listed:

Quote:The big task for the incoming Biden administration is reconfiguring, revising and rethinking what's possible in light of divided government.

The new Senate reality forces Biden officially to the center. It validates the incoming administration's view that the country isn't that progressive, while giving them some political cover to cut deals.

Why it matters: Look for more emphasis on the administrative side, such as rule-making and executive orders. While President-elect Biden might have some faith in cutting deals with Senate Republicans, his staff has far less.

Quote:A Biden presidency and a closely divided Senate means that nothing big is likely to happen in health care for at least the next two years.

Quote:Biden has said he would immediately rejoin the Paris climate agreement, but that's the easy part. Ultimately meeting his ambitions for the U.S. on the world stage would be much trickier.

Where it stands: Biden's domestic climate agenda will almost certainly be limited — at least for the foreseeable future — to what he can pursue using executive powers.

Quote:A Biden presidency will put the tech industry on more stable ground than it's had with President Trump. Although Biden is unlikely to rein in those Democrats who are itching to regulate the big platforms, he'll almost certainly have other, bigger priorities.

Quote:Economically, the outcome of the election could not be worse, Felix Salmon writes.

Gridlock is being cheered by financial markets wary of political overreach, but stocks are not the economy. In the depths of a global pandemic, fiscal boldness is exactly what's needed for the economy as a whole.

Quote:Biden's message to the world is that "America is back" — or will be, once he enters the White House.

You must of missed the part where I stated I am a registered Independent. In fact, I am probably more fiscally Conservative than you are. That's pretty ironic.

For the record, because of me being a business owner, and various other topics related to my thoughts on foreign policy; Trump actually had my vote this year. You truly shouldn't jump to conclusions in regards to your opinion of other people's political affiliation due to my thread's content, unless you know me personally.

Furthermore, If you are a true patriot and you respect the Constitution as much as you proclaim and love the country, you should concede and follow the American Democratic process. This is how it has been done for decades and this is part of the American Democracy.

In the future please do not speak out on me or others like that and make baseless presumptions about my political affiliation just because I post a thread in regards to Trump losing. Thanks.

Sincerely,
OP.

Yea, if Trump won your choice wouldn't of been an illusion it's only an illusion when your guy loses. I think the reason I'm annoyed is because of people like you who are so adamant on getting him into office before thinking about what you're doing. That's why I no longer drive on bridges or through tunnels.

I wont do it, Lrrr. It's too risky! Instead, I keep a kayak strapped to the top of my car.

Whenever I get to a bridge, I park and then abandon my car so I can paddle to the other side. So if you ever see a soaking wet man climbing out of the Brooklyn river screaming about bridges and tunnels; GIVE HIM A HAND! Because he's gonna be your next President!
