Thread: Which websites can I write peoples' essays for money?

The Berg - November 8, 2020, 4:24 pm

Hello! I am very good with academic writing and want to know where I could write students' essays and what not for money. Which websites, etc., how do I market this. Thanks.

I just got laid off from my construction job and I am desperate. The only huge skill I have is that I am good with English and good with writing essays (especially back in school and when I took college courses), and I want to utilize this skill to pay my rent and groceries before I go fucking homeless.

I already had a real job. There is nothing much left in the economy right now.

Well you could probably try and market yourself on here and pay someone to create a layout/graphic for your sales thread for your essay service.

That's not a bad idea... or maybe a website. Then market my website. But where do I find students and people in need of paying someone to write for them?

First off to tackle the bigger problem, go to your nearest town that has a temp agency such as Randstad. It's their job to get you a job, and you always get hired for any position available in the town.

As for essays, you can try freelancer websites. That would probably require building a portfolio and a good customer base in order to pay rent, but for sure start there. I know that freelancer.com is a place, not sure of the competition and that sort of thing. Search for various freelancer websites. There are essay services on Fiverr as well. To have steady full time work for any of these you will probably have to have a good portfolio.

Thank you for the response. I really do appreciate it. I will look into freelancer websites and see what that is all about.

Yes, I get my employment insurance, but it isn't much and it won't last very long since I already went on EI earlier this year.

You can no longer see this as you are being banned from Hf.

Before I read this comment, I wasn't aware that Randstad had become big enough to go international.
