Thread: Punishment/fines for breaking COVID quarantine?

What punishment/fines does the citizens in your country get if they break their COVID quarantine?
In my country, all they get is a fine of $ 2,220 USD (Scandinavia), which i think is ridiculous low given the circumstances?

jecoylecocoy - November 22, 2020, 7:15 pm

I'm my country is 30,000 pesos for breaking quarantine protocols like mass gathering.

How much would it be if they have been given a 1-2 week quarantine in their own home, which they aren't allowed to leave?

They are not allowed to leave their home but they do, and not reported. But there is one who has been filed a case and I don't know what are its consequences.

Whoa that was a great fine brother but hoping it will be implemented properly and people will abide by the rules.

siddy357 - November 23, 2020, 2:13 am

Hope my country had those fines to get the people in check for breaking the norms.

In my country it is about PLN 30,000 (7,987.01 US dollars). However, from what I hear from friends and people in my country, it is rare for someone to receive a full sentence for breaking quarantine (or these are isolated, unpublished cases).

Malthemar - November 23, 2020, 2:46 am

$14,000 USD is the maximum in my country.

SIM-4608916 - November 23, 2020, 7:12 am

Seems like there is a lot of differences depending on where we live.

In my country that fine isn't really that much for most people, and therefore many of them don't care about breaking the quarantine.

But yeah, only severe incidents results in getting that maximum fine.

If you break the new England lockdown rules, you could get a fixed penalty notice (FPN), the Covid equivalent of a parking ticket. Since March, almost 20,000 have been issued. These now start at £200, rising to £6,400. Large parties can be shut down by the police - with fines of up to £10,000

Regulus - November 23, 2020, 7:18 am

I am from Scandinavia as well and never ever heard about a punishment / fine if you break quarantine lol.

SIM-3343347 - November 23, 2020, 7:20 am

Imagine being fined for having freedom

Imagine sacrificing a week or two inside to decrease the possibility of infecting others in a pandemic.. Oh no.

Yeah from what i've seen and heard they didn't do much in the early stages, which has resulted in 6,400 deaths and over 208,000 infections.

Yeah i would guess it is more strict on shops and companies.

I read in the newspaper that a guy in a store spit on babies to infect them with corona.

I guess this pandemic shows who should be hospitalized..

Here in Canada, you get a big fat fine, and if you are caught from coming off a plane and not go home its liek 10k

MarvinMalware - November 23, 2020, 9:14 am

As far as I'm aware there isn't a fine where I live, sadly enough. We got plenty of people who quite literally couldn't care less and act as though the pandemic doesn't even exist.

Black Whale - November 23, 2020, 10:15 am

Zero for the person. The businesses are getting fined like 10,000 which is pretty unfortunate as they are already struggling.

TrueFalseKing - November 23, 2020, 11:45 am

Nothing. Fuck that. Liberty above everything.

In my country, you can't really leave the city region without any reason. Fine for that is 400€ - 4,000€. Altho police rarely give fines and mostly give warnings.

SIM-4608916 - November 23, 2020, 12:09 pm

I wonder how long it will take before we can start living as normal again.

Hopefully a vaccine will be ready at the start of next year, but i'm kinda skeptical taking a vaccine that has been "rushed" out to the market.

rsx - November 23, 2020, 12:10 pm

Living on the east coast of the US, people in my state don't give a shit about covid. I don't even think my county is giving out fines for being out past the "9pm curfew", but if they did it would only be max like $200. People are protesting having to wear masks here still lmao Shits a joke now. We're not gonna be back to normal until they release an effective vaccine. This has been going on almost a year now and we've shut the city down twice now, and people still won't listen.

Haha! Yeah i agree, we won't get back to normal until an effective vaccine has been released. Looking forward to it!

I don't think that civilians get fines, however I think that businesses can get hit pretty hard.

Bro recently looks like the rules are being implemented....too much crowd in the market place and no social distancing and some others are wearing no face mask and face shield.

It's on the national television and it happened in Divisoria in Manila.

Too much crowded places everywhere on that location and no visibility of any police officers.
