SecretAchiever101 - December 3, 2020, 5:05 am

First of all me and my family, wife and kid , are all from Greece. Born and raised here. Since the day I was born, Greek people used to treat black/iraqi/pakistani people differently. Badly obviously. Treat them like they are some kind of lower quality people, always degrading them and mocking them. There was a place, long ago, a car wash, near to where I used to live, run by a Greek guy, that had only Pakistani employees , so he can pay them less than the minimum wage, which is really low to begin with. Everytime I happened to pass by this place for some unknown reason he was always shouting at them and I even saw him push one of them to the ground once.

Anyway, 7 years ago, when I had literally no money at all, I got myself a job, handing out brochures and stuffers to random buildings, but in order to get in, they had instructed us to ring ALL the bells, so they open for us and we go in to leave them at their doorsteps. Obviously, I didn't want to do this, I didn't want to distrurb anyone, but if I didn't do so, they would have fired me, so I did.

Everytime I happened to run into a greek person, they would always storm out at me degrading me and insult me even tho I tried to explain that this, at the time, was my only option.

However, everytime I happened to run into a Pakistani or black person,they would always let me in the building and even sometimes offer to let me into their houses to give me water or food.

They understood my condition a lot more than Greek people did, they respected me and trusted me without even knowing me and I appreciated that heavily.

Now that my financial status is off the top, sometimes, I catch myself treating Greek people the same way they used to do at black/pakistani people. Disrespect them and degrade them fully knowing that they need me and have to endure this kind of behaviour from me. I guess, I want them to feel how it's like to be treated like less of a human, hoping that this will humble them a bit.

However, while this is deserving in some kind of twisted way, it creates an never ending cycle of hate. Hate breeds more hate. So instead of actually helping them to humble themselves, I just give them brand new reasons to hate on each other, feeding off of it and continue expanding this vicious cycle even more. I am starting to realise that I am guilty of the same thing that I hated Greek people for and as I grow older I cannot keep avoiding this realisation, I have to face it and overcome it.

These were my thoughts regarding the whole situation. I would appreciate any kind of feedback, whether it's good or bad. Thanks in advance.

Not really the point of your story but my experiences are the complete opposite. I've always had good experiences with greek people and mostly found Pakistani people to be really rude. Overall everybody individually is different so yeah our personal experience can lead us to generalize but you're not really gaining anything from treating random people how some other random people treated you.

If I am being honest, Greek people I've met in this forum were pretty okay and yeah of course generalizing is indeed bad that's what I am starting to realise as I grow older. Don't get me wrong, of course there are some good greek people out there and some bad as well. That is true for every race in this planet. However, most of my serious encounters with Greek people so far, especially Greek "businessmen" were shit and eventually after many and many encounters like this, you're starting to think...Is it a culture thing? If it is, then it's right feeling this way.

People can be different depending on their own position. It's possible poor Greek people in Pakistan would have acted the opposite way & the same for Pakistani people.

This is a strong story my friend.

And I admit that I am impressed that after reflection you want to break this vicious circle.

Violence, aggression as a substitute for arguments, hatred towards other people (regardless of whether it is on a racial basis or not) - this never solves anything, but only deepens the problems that we have enough in today's world. Instead of fueling this madness, it is always better to reach out to the other person without looking at the past we have behind us. Then our future will become much brighter

All the best to you?

You should be the one that sets the example.

So for you to behave like that IS making it worse.

But you already know this.
You're pretty smart, have a good observation about yourself.

I would have the same as you tho.

Your perspective is insightful, I can relate in some ways based on my own ideological values. Nonetheless, I strive to devalue those thoughts as I think them.

They can be a bit intrusive sometimes.. Based on your story, I think you'll work out the kinks yourself.

You are aware enough to know the feeling, but enough to realize the animosity behind reacting the way you want to.

Yeah exactly. When someone isn't nice to you , you feel this urge to retaliate, but rarely it is correct to do so. But, unfortunately, you do indeed feel the need the retaliate.

It's understandable why you would want to retaliate and it's good that you recognize your bias. With that being said I feel like equality will never be reached because people just love to take advantage of people's kindness.

Too many shitty people exist in this world (of all races). The only way this will ever change is if the people around them start holding them accountable.

There really isn't anything wrong with "racism" in my opinion. It is the neurotypical, natural historical behavior of genetic groups. It is kind of an engrained self defense mechanism in my opinion. This is why I have such a problem with multicultural societies and anyone who encourages them. You're basically forcing people with different values to accept each other and work together. This is going directly against how we have evolved.

I think all cultures should be preserved to a degree. There is nothing wrong with staying independent from each other and developing in our own ways.

Treating people like shit is not good but it is not bad to prefer your own. Again, this is why birds of a feather should and do flock together. It avoids this kind of bullshit.

Yeah but what happens when it is way more statistically likely you are going to run into a shitty person of a particular race? Wouldn't you be better off to just stereotype most of them and avoid them? Respect needs to be earned. Especially if we are less likely to share common interests, identities or overall cultural similarities. Viewing the world in this way is to be pragmatic, not ignorant.

The burden of proof is on the individual and always will be. You don't just "accept" someone ideologically before you vet them through your internal verification process. Factoring in race is actually a statistically viable method on aggregate for determining someones quality in certain characteristics. Not on an individual basis necessarily, but certainly in the grand scheme of things. If I assume person A is going to be more likely to default on money I loan to them, because they happen to be a drug user. Is this not an effective stereotype? Drug addicts are with out a doubt less likely to be trustworthy in almost anyone's anecdotal experience. Why would other statistically significant differences between groups not apply? Especially when we can literally observe clear differences between groups in pure, analytical data.

While I understand the point you're trying to make and I agree at some specific points, I heavily disagree for the most part. Yes, indeed, it's natural for someone to feel more comfortable with "His kind" if you may, however , your "kind" becomes the people that you grew up with. It's not like we were born and when being babies, we feel like black people are not are kind, of course not.

I guess what I am trying to say is, yes, it's obviously logical to feel more comfortable with your "kind", either this is defined from your nationality, race, cultural background, however that doesnt mean a multicultural society is wrong. Bringing all cultures together is going to form a new culture and then people that are part of this culture, these are going to be your "kind" then.

I think you kind of described where racism comes from. People who are angry, often unintended develop hatred against those who inflicted you harm or might be handled unfairly in a positive way in your eyes. A different example is how people with often low-incomes and financial struggles are more likely to hate on the government.

A multicultural society doesn't work. We have all the proof we need. We've ran the experiment in America nearly the past 60 years since segregation ended. To this day, some of the most segregated cities in America are the most "diverse". Not only that, the states that are the most unsafe to live in, with high amounts of crime, horrible budget deficits, chronic financial problems and high racial tensions are all the fucking "multicultural" states. It doesn't work. We need to drastically reduce all immigration into the country. Whites will be a minority by 2045. Things are going to get worse. Wages will continue to be diluted. There will be more competition in the job market, leading to an overabundance of low skilled labor. You'll see housing prices drastically increase over the years. Inflation will continue to rise rapidly as it has since the Federal Reserve took control of the money supply in 1913 with the Federal Reserve Act.

Ask yourself, do you really think the ruling class support mass immigration because they want a healthy society? A healthy middle class. The class that potentially threatens them the most?

Why is it that the safest places to live in America, are quite literally are all mostly homogenous, white states, cities, counties, towns, etc. Why is it that socialism only works in small, white European countries? Why is it that every single African nation and most South American countries are straight up banana republics with constant problems?

Why is some of the safest countries in the world places like Japan, which has a homogenous population and a high nationwide IQ average.

I don't know about you but I don't want to live around people that commit crimes at significantly higher rates. I don't give a fuck what reason you try to cite to justify it. The definition of racism is being prejudiced against a specific group of people. Either it is cultural or social. Therefore, this, indeed cannot be eradicated. We are still going to retain these "defence mechanisms" for as long as we live. However, we can try to cope with them and ease them out a bit where we deem it's worthy to do so. And we should do that. We all know the quote "you shouldn't judge a book by it's cover" and while it isn't completely correct, it hold some massive truth behind it.

Let's imply , for the sake of the argument, that what you're implying is correct and multicultural socities are not a good option. What should we do in the state we are now as a better alternative?

Asking him that question is going to lead to trouble. Or he'll ignore it.

The definition of racism is being prejudiced against a specific group of people. Either it is cultural or social. Therefore, this, indeed cannot be eradicated. We are still going to retain these "defence mechanisms" for as long as we live. However, we can try to cope with them and ease them out a bit where we deem it's worthy to do so. And we should do that. We all know the quote "you shouldn't judge a book by its cover" and while it isn't completely correct, it holds some massive truth behind it.

I do have a solution. Immigration reform, aka heavily restrict immigration. End "affirmative action" programs, stop encouraging miscegenation. Stop shaming whites for moving to their own suburbs, etc.

Like in China, they literally have no naturalization process. Not saying we should be like China, but why would I care about China's immigration policies? People criticize whites for wanting to maintain control over their own countries. It's fucking pathetic and hypocritical.

Would you let your neighbor come into your house as a guest and just start rearranging shit? Demanding that you abide by their values and way of life?

Europeans have had culture and it's been being ruined, diluted and destroyed. Now a large portion of our youth talk like their black and idolize drug addicted rappers involved in crime. It's astonishing how many people are asleep to this.

I believe what I believe so strongly I would be willing to die if I thought I could change it.

Is there anything you believe in, in similar fashion?

Side note, i'm here because I like programming and remember browsing this site as a young teenager long ago.

I just think you dedicate a lot of time to something without really achieving results. Like there must be a better way to go about it or a better way to reach people.

Yes. I have some plans in the works to disseminate my message further in the future. You never know, my posts could resonate with someone, leading them to do their own research. At the end of the day, HF is a place of ideas. I can't really think of a better place to have ideas challenged, so they can be perfected.

HF definitely influences me in certain ways.
