Thread: Feeling FOMO From BTC? Get your ETH NOW!

Omniscient - December 17, 2020, 10:43 am

If you missed out on the BTC ATH into $20k+ territory and you're feeling angry, confused, and just generally upset. Then I have a solution for you. Buy Ethereum asap.

With Bitcoin hitting their ATH, it's only a matter of weeks before ETH does as well. ETH ATH is $1,448.18 in Jan 2018.

Bitcoin's last high was 3 years ago Dec 16th, 2017. The new ATH for BTC hit almost perfectly 3 years later.

Ethereum's ATH in 1 month will be exactly 3 years ago. What do you think is going to happen? Ethereum high will follow the BTC high if only because people who think BTC is too expensive will consider ETH a value buy by comparison. Then you have the added benefit of ETH 2.0 coming soon and those needing 32 ETH to stake.

I've watched 32 ETH match up to 1 BTC for a few weeks. Currently 32 ETH is 10% below value by comparison.

BTC is also very likely imho to continue rising but the percentage of gain should be higher on Ethereum.

My call is $1k ETH within 3 weeks then a potential breakout in 5 weeks to $1500. BTC at that time is likely in the $30k range but percentage wise you'll gain more in ETH in this scenario.

btw, this is my cool story and not investment advise.

Fuck crypto.

Index funds till I retire. Tyvm.

I'm going to get my dad to put some of his extra stock money into ETH tho. Thanks.

This is current time to buy ETH?

Market is up by 15-20% in last few hours.

Should we wait for a correction and then buy eth?

Percentage wise, ETH has outperformed BTC by almost double YTD, even with this current spike. So, to me it only makes sense that ETH will continue to do so. I've been about 60% ETH in portfolio since March. Definitely paying off.

I actually just swapped my remaining BTC into half CVC, half NuCypher. And will swap back after a few % increase.

My LTC feeling nice now also.

Man, I just love crypto.

SwissBorg is a good way to buy crypto, I've seen a few YouTubers talking about it because there's no fees and SwissBorg (CHSB) is also a very good investment right now, they will do very well in this bull run.

I haven't bought from there yet but I've just got my account verified today and that's where I will be buying from now on.

Thanks for the investment advice, I'll put my my life savings in ETH right now!

No jk, but I have plenty of ETH right now since when it was worth $60 and thrown in a shitload in the meantime while it was growing.

As I've experienced many times, whatever goes up fast, goes down fast as well. I think I'll just wait til this entire hype is gone and BTC becomes stable as well, then I'll start throwing in more again.

Because I'm pretty sure there's still a big ass ATH waiting for BTC once it hits its max market cap. When that's near, I'll go in with full force on BTC and ETH.

For now I don't wanna catch a falling knife (Yes I know it's gonna go up in the long term, but I prefer jumping in when a certain hype is over and it recovers to its support level)

Mewtwo - December 17, 2020, 12:30 pm

ETH has outperformed BTC by almost double YTD? Do you even know what you're talking about?

The % increase over time is what matters, not huge spikes and dips...

At the current rate of BTC/ETH what do you guys think it's worth to own? BTC is up and outperforming ETH (by reaching & smashing its ATH) but I have a lot of BTC and a lot of ETH - 80% in BTC 20% in ETH. Is it time to convert BTC to ETH? so you pick an irrelevant date on 2020 and consider that even worth mentioning lol

Do you invest only on January 1st? why is it important?

I am retired from what I posted back in 2011-2012 where the skids posted about altcoins you never heard of.

ETH skids will lose their money and be bag holders, others will quit crypto altogether.

But hey, the great thing about this all, is its all on record. And I make sure to quote a few skids as they like to delete their posts after losing.

Because using a YTD timeframe is relevant to charting? TF?

I don't know why you keep referencing shitcoins from 9 years ago, because we are talking about BTC and ETH in current day. Your arguments are not even relevant.

I am constantly swapping between coins, depending on chart analysis amongst other factors. Doing so allows me to accumulate more coins, or partial coins on dips.

Definitely don't "win them all", but I'm substantially up from what I have invested over the course of my investing career in the crypto sphere.

Omniscient - December 17, 2020, 3:06 pm

Quote:If BTC rallies a lot, you will see ETH rally a little.

That's historically untrue.

1 year gains...

BTC: 233%

ETH 388%

30 day gains...

BTC: 37%

ETH: 40%

You probably aren't looking at percentages which is more important than hard-dollar amount. You think BTC going up $1100 is a lot and think ETH going up $90 is a little but percentage comparison shows the ETH gain more.

Truth Wrote:Those who hold ETH long term will lose relative to BTC

And you'll be wrong if my OP is right and ETH hits ATH within a few months.

I'm glad we have post dates to review later on when one of us is proven right. I'll be sure to quote again.

Binance offers 1 - 125x, ByBit offers 1 - 100x.

They also offer cross-leverage and isolated leverage, meaning you can isolate the risk to the position itself but at a tight liquidation price, or you can use your entire account as collateral for a higher liquidation price.

Your liquidation price is dependent on many factors, including the type of collateral (Cross vs. Isolated), position size, account size, etc.

Yes, you are right that risk is multiplied, but it is still useful in many strategies.

I identify key short term support and resistance levels and trade bounces off of them. I set my stop-loss RIGHT past the support or resistance level so that even with 125x leverage, I can lose nine trades for every one that I win and I stay profitable.

If you approach it like a gambler then it's not for you, but leverage is extraordinarily useful for managing risk, ironically. You can hedge positions easily.

With leverage, my trading strategy is immensely profitable whereas without leverage it's barely worth the time.

My point is that you need very, very little to profitably trade BTC. Somebody said that crypto trading is the most expensive, but that doesn't make any sense at all. There is no minimum buy-in as there is with stocks or options, and leveraging options are widely available.

From my brief experience, there's so many problems with Bybit I don't even know where to begin. First of all, mobile is completely broken in the browser. The mobile app is completely broken. The desktop interface cancels out dropdown menus when you mouse over them, which is infuriating. You cannot entry edit orders by clicking them on the chart, you can only drag them. When post-only mode blocks a trade from executing against the book, it cancels the entry entirely instead of placing it at the front of the book. 2FA is mandatory, which is fugging annoying when using a throwaway account in combination with their nightmare mobile experience. I haven't tried to enter trades during "overload" volume periods, but even if the trading engine were amazing, it still doesn't make up for the unusable interfaces.

Oh yeah, and worst of all, they don't use Segwit addresses for deposit, and they don't recognize the bech32 address format with withdrawals, which is completely unacceptable considering the exchange was founded in 2018... after the Segwit soft fork upgrade occurred in 2017.

And although this is likely a biased comparison based on the publisher, it's still not a good look:

I'm really bullish long-term on XMR but it's going to be a long and steady road for Monero. With Ethereum it's going to pop to an ATH. XMR ATH is $543 which is a similar percentage against ETH. It's probably not a bad bet. I do know that not all exchanges support XMR and that it doesn't have the trade volume of ETH.

I don't personally see anything wrong with XMR as an investment choice. But the good news is ETH has staking and 2.0 on its side. Gather 32 ETH and start earning ~5%.

Yet the marketcap is less than what it is back then, but the volumes are almost 2x than what it was when ETH was ATH. Were people more willing to hold back then? Or is there something else that is causing this like Tether? Take the following with a pinch of a salt as this is my basic understanding.

Whilst volume does have a relationship to price, it of course does not necessarily mean that high volume = higher prices as there can be high volume during sell-off's as well. I think volume indicates the amount of market participants and trading activity.

Market cap is ETH in circulation x current price. It may be higher now relative to price because there's increased supply due to newly mined ETH.

Edit: typo

FYeah - December 20, 2020, 9:27 am

I'm holding some ETH, I do believe we'll see a run soon. Hopefully it'll smash past previous ATH.

(Dec 20, 2020 12:58 PM)Fictional Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) You'd think 3x the volume would offset the increased supply from minted coins but it isn't. Market cap = (Circulation * current price), now think about it a little bit what does current price depend on? It's the volumes, the amount of people willing to pay the current price for ETH and when there is more people wanting to buy than there is supply of they will try to pay more than the current price which in turn increases the market cap and the price of each ETH. But that's not the case here we have HUGE volumes compared to back in 2017, yet it doesn't affect the price as it did back then. Also, there is only about a 10% increase of supply since 2017.

To be honest, I don't know it myself but if I had to guess I'm thinking there is some type of market manipulation here.

There is likely higher liquidity than previously also. I imagine right now selling 10000 ETH would hardly move the market compared to 2017.

We can't predict the bottom or the top, don't beat yourself up about it look at the bigger picture, we are in a bull market, with everything that's going on in the world this bull market is far from over, and in every bull market there's dips and they are healthy and great opportunities to buy, if you have money to spare buy the dips, it will average your price entry down a bit more, it will give you a larger position and over all when it comes back up bigger gains.

Anyone comparing this bullrun to the one in 2017 is dead wrong.

This bullrun is entirely different and can't be compared to the one in 2017 in any way possible.

Alts will not follow like they did in 2017, this is a Bitcoin bullrun and that is because this bullrun is mostly based on company cash not retail cash, and companies are interested in bitcoin and will continue to accumulate it, they won't pay attention to Ethereum or others, we should be happy that bitcoin is finally becoming an interesting asset in their eyes, don't get over your heads thinking that ethereum or others will get the same attention, maybe in the very long term but definitely not any time soon.

Could ethereum get a pump? Yes ofcourse, other alts aswell, but those pumps would be entirely irrelevant to bitcoin's growth and the current bitcoin cash flow.

So if you invest in ethereum or other altd because in 2017 eth and alts followed bitcoin, then you should definitely reconsider your investment right away, and do better TA and research.

With Bitcoin hitting their ATH, it's only a matter of weeks before ETH does as well. ETH ATH is $1,448.18 in Jan 2018.

Bitcoin's last high was 3 years ago Dec 16th, 2017. The new ATH for BTC hit almost perfectly 3 years later.

Ethereum's ATH in 1 month will be exactly 3 years ago. What do you think is going to happen? Ethereum high will follow the BTC high if only because people who think BTC is too expensive will consider ETH a value buy by comparison. Then you have the added benefit of ETH 2.0 coming soon and those needing 32 ETH to stake.

I've watched 32 ETH match up to 1 BTC for a few weeks. Currently 32 ETH is 10% below value by comparison.

BTC is also very likely imho to continue rising but the percentage of gain should be higher on Ethereum.

My call is $1k ETH within 3 weeks then a potential breakout in 5 weeks to $1500. BTC at that time is likely in the $30k range but percentage wise you'll gain more in ETH in this scenario.

btw, this is my cool story and not investment advise.

Yeah I feel like Ethereum will outpace Bitcoin. Especially when Bitcoin is done rallying and spreads the Dominance..

Cryptic™ - December 31, 2020, 1:15 am

Tomorrow I'm restructuring my portfolio to only ETH/BTC and two silver Divi nodes.

I have a handful of other alts I'm in but I'm just going to sell them at a loss for whatever it's worth.

I anticipate huge moves are coming for BTC next year. All these companies that are buying in are seeing their stock prices drastically increase and other companies are going to follow suit.

Huge companies are buying BTC in the 20k ranges and their not gonna let it drop, these are massive support levels and their only going to keep going higher and higher. Dips will happen, prices will crash but they'll get swallowed up and recover much quicker.

It seems crazy to think but BTC might actually hit 80k by the third quarter of 2021, when you think it through, it dosent really seem that far fetched.

We are going to see sell offs in the next few weeks but they won't last too long or too low, considering more and more companies are buying in. A lot of people are sitting on the side lines waiting for a crash below 18k, but I doubt that'll happen.

When BTC does take a massive dip and I see a bottom I'm going to take 0.5 BTC and set it at a 3x LONG on Binance and just let it run, with a 25% stoploss, there's gonna be a big explosion to the upside at some point and I wanna be in it all the way to the top.

2021 is going to be a big year. A lot of ppl got fucked over in the last bull cycle a few years ago. Some people are literally down 90% from it. This is another once in a life time opportunity to make up for it.

Quote:It seems crazy to think but BTC might actually hit 80k by the third quarter of 2021, when you think it through, it doesn't really seem that far fetched.

Exactly. Bitcoin has moved in multiples just fine year after year. There is nothing going to stop that till it's over a $1m per BTC. Zero reason why Bitcoin can't hit $100k within 18 months. I laugh at idiots, such as some of my friends, who refuse to buy because Bitcoin is "expensive". They said the same stupid shit when it was $1000, then at $10,000, and moronically again when it will be $100,000. They don't get that it's PERCENTAGES. You can buy $500 worth of Bitcoin no matter what the price of a single Bitcoin is at. If it goes up 300% then you've tripled your investment.

But this thread is about Ethereum which isn't exactly the same market imho.

Voxi Wrote:Do you still think ETH will hit $1k by the 7th Jan? (3 weeks)

Maybe a week or two later. I still think in January it will hit $1k. We'll see within 5 days how the new year is going to move the market.

Yeah, because from what I see in the alt-market I am not yet very impressed by new technology or unique blockchains. So many projects look similar to Ethereum imho.

I like to ask myself on just about any blockchain if it can be done with Ethereum or even worse, is the project an ERC-20 token? ERC's have value imho but I question heavily some of the evaluations.

I agree but their argument is obvious that they solved the solution now and it's deployed. The maybe-if-someday scenario of Ethereum sharding might make some people anxious.

But I think Ethereum is very established, so much so that I don't think any of these projects with Smart Contract technology are going to surpass it.

I really doubt we will ever see a $20k ETH. At best in the best of circumstances $10k. That's unless something major changes like a hard limit to the ETH. ETH isn't meant to be BTC. It's not 'rare' in the same sense. It actually has inflation built in. Which in some respects makes it more usable and stable.

I know OP has been calling a lot of price predictions that have been very accurate (from what I've seen). He called a rebound on the dip we had in spring 2020 that was spot on.

He calls a $1 million $ bitcoin (one day). With inflation & the poor state of the dollar, I hope that's true.

btw, anyone notice that I'm right about the 32 ETH matching 1 BTC? It's within 10% of that pricing going back and forth as BTC moves around.

I don't know if that's the new norm just yet but certainly it's a new trend to pay attention to. For example if ETH gets over 20% of the value correlation it's possible we'd either see an ETH pullback or BTC upside. Someone might have to do some fancy charting on that. Would be cool to see day to day how it matches up on a chart.

I've been a consistent holder in BTC/ETH since 2017 but I feel like I should start selling at these super high points and try to get back in when it drops a little.. Like right now BTC is 34.3k - ETH 1120 it feels right to sell at this point (maybe BTC, not ETH so much) but then re buy in to it when it drops. I think I'll sell some BTC today with intentions of getting back in when it drops. Up 10% on the day isn't abnormal from what we have been seeing as it's been so hectic lately, but I think taking some profit off the top this point isn't bad.

If you are in the US, probably the better option is Binance US or Kraken Pro, the only bad thing is Binance takes a long time to verify your account if you don't have one yet.

Today that 32:1 ratio is holding strong. I think it's going to be an indicator going forward on which crypto is going to move and where. If for example it becomes 28:1 then I suspect ETH will rise.

1 BTC = 34,773.11
32 ETH = 34,311.68

About a 1% difference.

Why would you sell when Bitcoin had breached it's previous ATH back in December and even went parabolic after that shooting past $30k! Ethereum was gonna follow bitcoin's trend as expected literally by everyone. Having strong hands that don't panic sell, or get greedy for mini profits is the way to make money in crypto. If you can stomach a potential $1100 drop because you're holding long-term then just buy today. Especially buy early if you're planning on getting 32 ETH for the staking. If you're playing short-term trading games then I don't think you should bother investing yet. Maybe wait for a dip which might happen but maybe not.

I don't know where ETH goes from here. But even a dip shouldn't be below $1k. I'm holding just in case it's pops further. Does 2021 bring us a $3k ETH? It's possible imho but I won't set that yet as a target date or call.

shreder - January 19, 2021, 5:26 pm

I will not doubt a drop eventually it's inevitable for a dump. But do not fight the bulls when it's a bull market. I took a little profit, I'm not OMNI rich and it's a way to buy the dips and fight the bears when they do eventually occur.

Omniscient - January 19, 2021, 6:30 pm

Quote:I will not doubt a drop eventually it's inevitable for a dump.

I am not so convinced a dump is inevitable from these levels. I think we could bull market much higher and then dump to the levels we are at today.

I got 3 separate phone calls from friends/family asking me about ETH. Not one of them has yet invested into crypto after I've told them for years to do so. So what's changing now? And what happens in 2-3 weeks when all these people do start to open accounts and deposit funds to make buys?

I think average Joe sees Bitcoin at $40k and thinks Ethereum can do the same. So they really might buy it up to $5k.

What's going to happen in the market to cause a dump? Investors are learning to hold. Staking is here. 2.0 is coming. New money being thrown into the pool. Stimulus money too.

A dump? From $1400? Nah, don't think so. Dips to $1200-$1300 is more likely but those are going to be brief imho.

Exact same thing here. I told family to invest in BTC back in 2014-2016, they all laughed. Now I convinced them to buy ETH when you first made this thread and now they keep saying "ETH could be the next BTC", wanting to hold it forever.

No their going to decouple at some point and it will happen sooner than ya think.

BTC has no actual utility and it will remain #1 because of its scarcity which gives it such an immense value.

Within ten years we will see a 1 million dollars per bitcoin.

ETH on the other hand is the back bone of so many things, And gets its value for its utility.

Apples and oranges. Their both going no where but up. ETH 2.0 will be a game changer.

Buy 32 ETH now and lock it in and you will not regret it one bit. Locking it in forces you not to sell.

I don't agree. I think there will always be more ETH in the wild which means even if it was the same market cap that each ETH would be worth much less. ETH market cap is only 25% of BTC's. Currently there is 114,326,138 ETH floating around. It's too late for me doing these numbers but I'd say you have to halt the supply and burn over 90 million ETH which won't happen unless the majority of that is held by the team.

Meh, getting too late to do a deep look at how that would work.

There are great arguments for inflation to be part of a monetary system.

Example is that people will want to get a pay raise. Imagine you work at a job for 20 years but because money has no inflation you never get paid more.

Found this too: <https://www.thebalance.com/why-is-inflation-good-4065995>

I think it's amazing that Bitcoin is deflationary but it's NOT going to be the day to day spending money. Neither is Ethereum probably for that matter.

The Ethereum network has to remain cheap partially because of fees for ERC-20 tokens. It's a complex situation for them. I can see their justification for having inflation.

Glancing at some of ETH's sell charts, it looks like we're mainly being limited in the $1,250-1,400 range and again around the $1,500s. I didn't see any tremendous depth though, so if FOMO sticks around for the next few months I could easily see ETH ripping through to $2k.

I'm just hoping that the price setback of the few who got in and sold quickly on bitcoin doesn't deter other mainstream cryptos from following suit.

I think things are going down with every dip, the healing point is a bit lower each time the dip occurs, maybe investors are trying to find a more stable zone for Bitcoin thus all of the alt coins are following BTC/ETH.

Specifically with more parachains as they are happening, will Polkadot with launching new apps on their network will help out the coin to be a little bit more decoupled from BTC/ETH?

Goguen's release is just around the corner with smart contracts into play, staking will be easier. With the Converter people will be able to convert between tokens from ETH to ADA easily, and also the CEO is going to make lots of summits in Africa and try to raise attention for his project and I think a lot of hungry African whales will get on board soon.

I think the market is waiting for Biden reactions. I think some exuberance that the election was over and that Biden was inaugurated was partially responsible for the rise. But now he's in office. Market may want to see how things shake out from here with spending, stimulus and covid vaccines.

We may go lower, probably going to go lower. I think good indicators are going to be 2018 charts to compare against to see how it played out. But I do believe we'll maintain $20k+ for BTC levels. Gonna be really sad if we hit the teens again.

As for Cardano and Polkadot. I am not yet convinced of the merits of Polkadot to have such a large valuation. I actually believe some of the Defi projects stand more to gain by being directly involved in finance vs Polkadot which is more blockchain tech advancement. I'm going to probably make a more detailed post about that after a bit more research.

No, it won't hit $20k. $4500 is likely the top price it can hit in 2021 but I'm not even sure it will make that.

Holding ETH is smart but I advise caution with moon evaluations. ETH has proven to be much less volatile than BTC. Probably because it's not all in the hands of whales and there are so many more tokens (114m).

GreyScale reopened it's ETH trust locking up a bunch of ETH and other big instutions will follow.

Michael Saylor is meeting with CEOs/Directors/Boards of many many huge companies this month giving them strategies on how to get into crypto. Those effects wont be felt overnight but will be felt throughout the year.

Then you have all the ETH That is continously up in the DEFI space.

AAVE/Insurance is only going to continue to explode. AAVE can be looking at 3K per COIN, currently in the $300 region now.

Yes ETH has a lot of supply, things are going to get very interesting.

ETH 20K assuming BTC hits 200K IF we go parabolic in the last quarter of this year.

I think a 1:10 ratio down the road is reasonable. 0.1 ETH / BTC, were currently at 0.04 ETH/BTC, will be touching 0.05 soon so 0.1 is a good target for a few months from now.

$4500 is very reasonable no doubt. I just entered a ETH futures long at $1600 for a quick scalp and will ladder down and try to catch the bottom and let it ride out for weeks and see what happens. I did not realize Binance had a reverse futures thing so you can lose/gain ETH instead of USD.

Nope. I am sticking to my 32:1 ratio. Currently ETH in a pump and the current ratio imho makes me bullish on BTC to $50K. ETH will hit $20k when BTC is closer to $500k.

Quote:I think a 1:10 ratio down the road is reasonable.

Nope. That would give them an even market cap and imho BTC will reign #1 forever. There was a brief moment some years back that ETH could have taken the spot but it's clearer now that's not going to happen.

It's not about tokens, it's about who holds them in concentration. Omni's point is that many whales hold a large portion of BTC, where as Ethereum is more spread amongst the masses.

I disagree with his reasoning and think ETH is less volatile because it follows BTC, the majority of the time, and doesn't lead the market.

Yeah I was a bit too late, the exchanges were screwing me around a lot. Residing in the USA and having only an Australian ID/Passport/VISA was problematic with the verification.

Not sure if I should buy Eth's at 1600$/piece.

Also, please advise what pages I can buy from with my card. Is Skrill a valid thing? I see they sell Eth's/BTC's

Not upset bro - as I wrote in the other threads, looking for advises n stuff.

Thx for the response tho lol

I sold all my eth at ~1550 yesterday. It was nice gains, but I find it reasonable that i don't see much profits from this point on. For all those who started investing, for $1650 to turn into $3300 is a big goal. Eth marketcap is at $186b, so that means for it to reach double, it'll be $372b. I see eth reaching possible $2k, but I see many other projects with bigger potential for roi.

One thing you'll learn if you stick around crypto, or even traditional equities markets, is that the market cap of a security/coin/whatever is completely imaginary. For the market cap to double from $186b to $372b, many people actually believe $180b+ must be put into the market. In reality, that number would be more like $10-20b needed to double the spot price and create the new, and I repeat, imaginary market cap number.

I bought at $654 and sold at $1326, should of held but using the money for a house deposit. Thank you Omni!

I feel like eth will be smooth sailing to about $2k.

I bought nice amount around 400-500

It got tripled by now ??

I believe eth will boom even more when eth 2.0 is finally here

Nope. That would give them an even market cap and imho BTC will reign #1 forever. There was a brief moment some years back that ETH could have taken the spot but it's clearer now that's not going to happen.

I'll disagree a bit with you here. ETH might maintain its 32:1 (or close) ratio in the long run but looking at the rates at which it's being pumped we might see something like 12:1 or 10:1 ratio in a few days. But yeah, it won't be stable and should come back to the levels you've stated.

Edit// I am talking in terms of ETH/BTC pair and not ETH/USD.

Just bought 1 ETH to get started. I've been holding BTC all this time but I think it's my time to conquer new challenges.

Thanks for the valuable opinions Omni, they're greatly appreciated.

Got in at ~150,

Tripled my stack at omni advice at ~700

Sold 1 at first break out and another at 1690!

Also staked a few on binance in it for the long run!

Maybe i should buy l33t as a token of gratitude for omni's advice haha

Will do, on the list! also It sounds early but, ETH was almost at $99 only 6 months ago, lol wish I had a larger capital, it's human psychology to feel regret and miss present opportunities, this is why I have staked a few eth, I believe people will be regretting not buying at these prices in next 5-10 years :)

It's buy low and sell high if you want to invest. Better options are out there. The time to have bought BNB has passed imho. Especially today where it's up 58%. Two months ago it was $40. Great gain and it's #3 market cap. Not sure it can push much more.

In my opinion I see the price doubling then what it is now. Not at this very moment but at least the end of this year which it will have a 100 billion market cap.

Potentially. I really don't know how the fees and txn times are with BNB but I'm going to start accepting it for HF payments next week along with DAI. BTC and ETH fees are horrible right now.

100% possible, CZ said 200k+ new users join Binance daily week ago in a interview, BNB is def going to enjoy from that mass horde of newbloods.
