Writing a comment here won't fully do the project justice there is a lot to say and as always DYOR. The telegram group is a wealth of high quality information on the project which I'd suggest reading through some of the information there before making a decision.

Coinmarketcap: <https://coinmarketcap.com/currencies/radix/>

Radix Chainlink Partnership:

<https://medium.com/@uygarpelin/radix-partners-with-chainlink-9ef6d8e09414>

Here's a quick breakdown of some of the many reasons why I believe this project is something really special.

Layer 1 Dapp platform built to support DeFi

Marketcap is tiny compared to competitors

New type of DLT structurem parallises transactions

Scales linearly without bottlenecks

8 years of R&D went into the project

Solves the trilemma

The only sharded layer 1 with atomic composability

Prevents smart contract Hacks and exploits

Very dev friendly platform

Component catalogue for easy app building

Lifetime royalties for devs who build components

World class team with members from ycombinator consensys and microsoft

Not only is the technology good the roadmap is very busy this year, here are some events in the near future.

Cassandra testnet V1 Q1

Olympia Betanet Q2

Olympia Mainnet and wallet Q2

Cassandra testnet V2

Alexandra Mainnet

More CEX listings likely

There is so much more to say about this project but I'd suggest reading the some of the articles on their site, reading the whitepapers or going to the telegram and discord groups if you want a more in depth understanding.

Nice one man, me too? been buying dips since December. Will be holding for 3-5 years aswell, maybe like 10 years but we'll see. Can't wait till mainnet gets launched. My staking period will end the beginning of March?

You're correct. Waves did it in 2016. I'm not sure who was the first since Radix exclusively focusses on DeFi projects & I'm not sure if waves also only focusses on DeFi (haven't looked into this good enough so I'm not sure).

I've been looking into Radix & it seems a bit under the radar for how advanced their tech is. The project looks solid & very thought out, it's been in the works for a long time like OP said. I guess we'll see how they measure up once the mainnet launches & until then it's largely speculation, but i think they could be a sleeping giant in DeFi.

They are not lying about date etc. i am following them pretty long time, their claim is solid project with unlimited scalability(Q4 2021) to prevent bottlenecks in future(just like eth, btc etc.).I actually invite some deep knowledge users/developers to this forum, they are planning to create topic once they release the mainnet.Without product no one will believe them and nobody should, we will see.

Indeed my man. A lot of people sleeping on this project. Their YouTube channel is pretty filled up with a lot of video's explaining what they're doing.

It's going for $0.11713 as I'm posting this. I think soon we won't ever see prices like these ever again.

You're right. When EXRD gets swapped to XRD tokens and the price will be $1 (not saying it will be $1 when mainnet launches but I am a great believer) people wont understand how they could have missed this opportunity.

I keep buying more and more lol and my staking rewards are also almost done?

I bought in today after monitoring it for a little while and doing some research. It definitely does seem promising, but as someone who's been in crypto a very long time and watched the alt season come and go during 2017, I'm just skeptical of putting money into low cap alts.

That being said, it's clear that we are in an alt season, and this particular project seems both promising and under the radar, so I'm willing to put some money in. I'll continue watching it and perhaps add to my position if things look good moving forward.

Evil Bob - February 11, 2021, 7:17 pm

Added Radix to my portfolio, thanks OP.

Looks like a very interesting project. I just hope it's not too heavily dependent on the main founder because the other LinkedIn members didn't seem like they had much experience. Dan Hughes seems really solid though. I'll keep adding to my bag as I pull out of other coins.

Recon12345 - February 13, 2021, 2:06 pm

Looks like a solid coin. Not 100% ofc but I wouldn't invest in it right now. It clearly aims to boom during the next bull run if they play their cards right with the attraction of investors that they were talking about.

No point buying right now unless you might want to get some quick gains because hype / shilling. Other than that I will definitely buy some of it after the bull run is over and it's price will probably collapse. Therefore buying it way cheaper and just hold it for a few years.

I hope for you we will reach a price lower than $0.10 in next bear season. I've bought alot in the 4c 5c price range. My guess radix will be one of the few coins that'll keep an overall stable price when bear season kicks in. But unfortunately we don't have a glass sphere.

If buying bigger amounts of exrd your best bet would be Uniswap and try to snipe a time were the fees are not so high.

For smaller investments Bittfinex is recommended, however their withdrawal fee is in the hundreds of exrd at the moment so that's pretty bad aswell.

I have bought both on Bitfinex and Uniswap

Pardon me that was from a conclusion of 1.5 weeks ago.

A week and a half ago it was cheaper to do swaps on uni. Current gas fees on uni are killing though. Small swaps might not be worth due to this. CEX has smaller trade fees which is better for people at the moment, however Uniswap has more liquidity, so big buys move the price less in Uni.

Bitfinex requires KYC and they reject you if you're in USA. That might be a reason why. Certainly it's my reason. I wish I could have a Bitfinex account. :(

Tons of people waiting stake system they will withdraw entire liquidity to stake to prevent potential huge LP loss, it will pump prices really good(atleast my expectations).Still my expectation is 1$+ for this year, but within couple years min 10$+ after all they will not fail just like ETH, they wont have to change their network(like eth did, pitiful lol), they wont have to stupid forks.Stake system rewards will be there for next 40 years, i think everyone should consider this is as a real investment for future.I convert %50-60 of my bitcoins into this project because there is 0 way to BTC is hitting x10 within 1 years.

The highly anticipated launch of the Radix mainnet in Q2 of this year is gathering a lot of attention as Radix continues to prove itself over competing blockchains like Ethereum, Polkadot (slow finality times and lack of atomic composability), Solana (not really decentralized with very high requirements for node runners) and Avalanche (security flaw led to first breakdown of the network).

Expect significant spotlights coming to Radix very soon."

Nah probably he is not talking about selling. Liquidity program was offering %600 for first providers, most of people start to leave from pool(because its reduce a lot so far) probably that's what he is talking about. Once reward pool finish people will leave their liquidity and price will pump. Also with mainnet we will have stake system to generate passive income(for 40 years straight), and of course there a lot of people will stake their assests because there will be no risk to lose anything.

"Reassuming" is not a word. I think you mean "repeat" maybe?

The market can be fickle for all cryptos and predicting with absolute certainty it won't go back to .06 is something no one can do. I will say what I would do if it did, that would be to invest another $10k into it immediately. I wish I saw this project in January under ten cents.

Blockchain technology should solve problems. The bigger and more important the problem it solved the more value it should have. Then there is how unique the solution is for additional value. Overall I'm looking at Radix as one of the best blockchain solutions I've come across.

IMHO the closer they get to mainnet launch and continue in their development success the more value we'll see in the token. This is a serious project.

Thank you for breaking down your thinking. It helps me better understand where your investment strategies are.

I will invest money in this project, or want to anyway but I find the only way to attain some of this currency is through bitfinex or P2P wallet trades. They have a questionable withdrawal limit: The fee structure for withdrawing fiat currencies is 0.1% of the amount withdrawn, with a minimum $60.00.

Does this then mean I need $60.00 of underlying funds to withdraw or will the fee be the minimum $60? I don't expect you to know off hand but it's just another consider, on top of trading fees.

Do you know if bitfinex is a reliable marketplace?

Repeat is a little vague so I used reassume. Reassume = To occupy or take again: re-claim, reoccupy, repossess, resume, retake, take back.

It does imply a positive result but I can see your view.

Is Radix a blockchain though?

I've been reading about it for a while, they've certainly done some work to get the word out.

Isn't the whole idea behind Radix and what distinguishes Radix from it's competitors is that it isn't a blockchain but uses their unique consensus mechanism and distributed technology etc etc to solve the traditional blockchain trilemma which is why they have unlimited scalability (or composability) because there are no blocks - or did I completely misunderstand?

Omniscient - March 5, 2021, 12:25 pm

It's not traditional blockchain tech as in your quote.

Here is a whitepaper quote...

Quote: In the early stages of the network when there may be relatively few transactions (and associated fees), virtually all blockchains (including Radix) subsidize the rewards to node-runners via token supply inflation or simply a subsidy paid from a reserve.

And...

Quote:Different shards can be thought of as separate blockchains (in fact sometimes that is literally what they are), but where there is some method to send messages between them.

So they consider themselves part of the blockchain technology industry.

To my understanding, this is essentially correct. Radix is not a traditional blockchain. I wouldn't say there are no blocks, Cerberus employs 'vertexes' (or vertices(?)) that act in a similar fashion.

Interesting that they've put this in their whitepaper because I am not sure whether Radix is a blockchain, i.e. a chain of blocks. It is a distributed ledger and AFAIK, the Blockchain is the just most popular distributed ledger technology.

IMO they're just capitalising on the Blockchain hype and DeFi issues to promote their tech, which so far sounds amazing. Albeit I don't think it's open source so not sure if verifiable independently, but I might be wrong - still doing my research.

The lads seem pretty smart and presentable though.

(Mar 5, 2021 01:26 PM)BV1 Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) To my understanding, this is essentially correct. Radix is not a traditional blockchain. I wouldn't say there are no blocks, Cerberus employs 'vertexes' (or vertices(?)) that act in a similar fashion.

From my limited understanding and as far as where I have gotten in my research so far is that traditional blockchains are vertical in nature and they are trying to use sharding to scale horizontally, i.e. Ethereum 2.0. -

<https://cointelegraph.com/explained/vertical-and-horizontal-blockchain-scaling-explained>

However, Radix hasn't got a vertical structure, i.e. a blockchain. Radix relies entirely on sharding and a horizontal structure.

See below. You can read more here - <https://www.radixdlt.com/post/sharding-in-radix/>

Quote:Radix, however, is fully sharded from the beginning. It will launch with the maximum amount of 18.4 quintillion shards already existing. This is so we can meet the scale a globally used platform will eventually need. Each shard would be able to process 2,000 tps a second, or a total hypothetical throughput of 36.8 sextillion tps at full capacity. Each node maintains as many shards as it can, dropping shards too heavy for it so even low-powered devices to participate. To ensure high availability, the system pulls nodes into underserved shards.

Quote:Deterministic data

Instead of starting with the single vertical structure, Radix uses a horizontal data architecture which can be easily indexed.

Why does this indexing matter? Well, imagine you have a very large book collection and every time you buy a new book you have to reindex the entire shelf because something has changed. With the amount of data being processed by DLTs, however, a more apt analogy would actually be to imagine you had to store every book ever created but also know where every word from each of these books were. And every time a new book was added, every word from every book ever would be reorganized but you would have to (instantly) keep track of the new order. This would be time consuming, to say the least.

Instead now picture there was a pre-existing slot for every word of every book so that when you bought a new book you would already know where it was going to go, with all your other words remaining in the same place. Would this not be much simpler to keep track of?

This is essentially what Radix achieves by using a pre-sharded structure. Because the data architecture is split into shards from the start we know how the network will be cut up and indexed. Over time, as transactions and activity occurs, data will be added and will occupy a new part of shard space. By using key reference fields (such as public keys) we will always be able to find that piece of data and know where it will reside in perpetuity. This means that nodes aren't forced to update their entire ledger every time a new transaction is made, but rather that they just add the newest transaction.

This is achieved through a deterministic process, a process which will always output the same answer given the set of inputs. This process is important, because it means we are working off of a data structure which can scale linearly.

Here's a non-tech explanation which led me to dig into a bit more to find out if it is even a blockchain:

10:05 is where it starts.

I might be completely wrong but yeah that's my understanding so far.

My Advise, when you buy E-XRD, hold the coins until mainnet launches or when EIP-1559 is implemented (not sure what the base fee will be though).
If you want to join the liquidity mining pool, I'd suggest purchasing directly from Uniswap instead of Bitfinex

Yeah but isn't it weird how their 2008 reddit account is /u/radix? Radix name came before eMunie unless Dan bought that account or something Radix subreddit in 2014 used to belong to this guy <https://www.reddit.com/user/jaysmith> and this account seems to be inactive and he's no longer a mod there.

Perhaps /u/jaysmith = Dan Hughes? or maybe this is Dan's current account

Fantastic read. Makes me want to go really deep into Radix. I'm already $xx,xxx but the more I know the more I want to double-down again on this. If he's successful in releasing Radix it's going to leapfrog Ethereum and Cardano technology-wise. That puts it into top 10 position and probably quickly.

A $10b market cap is top 10. Current cap for Radix is $140m. So that's a potential for a 70x multiplier. Radix would go from $.185 to $13.

Yeah, I need to double my Radix holdings soon.

Yes and the current market cap is based on a 730m circulating supply. For context, they have only released 30% of the c4bn eXRD supply so far. This is dependent on price action 7 day SMA, see the econ paper for more info. There are a lot of unclaimed tokens suggesting there are some hardcore holders who's not actively looking at it. 3bn out of the c4bn belongs to the community, provided most early investors are hardcore holders, this should be fine.

When mainnet is launched, another 5.19bn supply is released, but of course these won't come into circulation unless the team and devs decide to do so. Emission is capped at 300m XRD for staking rewards per annum, on top of the (9.5bn released - albeit most won't be in circulation, see graph below).

FYI on supply, from the Radix Telegram (based on the Economics whitepaper)

I'm not saying any of this is an issue, but 70x is pretty unlikely unless we make it to top 10 this cycle, which is also pretty unlikely. Maybe a 20x sounds more reasonable given the supply?

From what I've googled, fully diluted marketcap is what the marketcap WOULD be if all coins were distributed but wtf did my friend mean then? Why is it a not good investment because fully diluted marketcap is almost 1bil?

Yes, it's currently an ERC20 token, so any ETH wallet can be used. The betanet releases next month and mainnet this summer.

The total supply isn't so much the problem as how that supply gets released. Does it have to be purchased at market price? Does it have to be mined? Or do the founders of the project just slowly receive them after intermittent time periods and lockups?

Basically, do the excess tokens in total supply that aren't currently on the market have to be earned, or will they at some point be added to the Radix economy freely without consequence, and potentially dumped?

I actually don't know I've been so focused on the technology aspect, but this is an important question, hopefully someone can fill us in.

So after a quick read I recommend you look through the Economics White Paper for token distribution... it seems to have rules for token price being the primary unlocking mechanism, with time somehow worked into the equation as well. Can't say I'm a huge fan of Founders retaining 10% of all tokens but that seems to be on the low end of crypto projects so it's not the worst either.

It does also appear that at least 50% of tokens are reserved for 'network distribution' which I am believing to mean staking rewards for those that secure the network.

Check my post above for a proper summary on token distribution -

<https://hackforums.net/showthread.php?tid=6138789&pid=60649147#pid60649147>

FYI it is price vested. The full 9.5bn supply once mainnet kicks in won't be unlocked until the price hits 0.43$ and stays there for c.20 weeks.

From the point of the post I made above, I went on to not being able to justify an actual 20x unless the tokens don't come into circulation for a long time. A realistic price point would be $1-$3 (6 - 20x) range if it can get the same traction as Cardano (and current total market cap of crypto remains where it is now) but the higher end seems kind of unlikely unless it gets really hyped. That being said, you never know, this is just my thought process based on what I know, which I admit is probably not as much as some others might so interested to see other people's thoughts.

Also very surprised most people on this thread has aped into the coin without doing any of their own DD.

You can buy into a token and still have concerns. I believe in the tech, but the tokenomics are a little iffy and could potentially suppress prices for a really long time. We shall see.

Here is my story. I believed early that Bitcoin, when it was $100, it was going to be 10k and 100k one day. I could have invested $10k into BTC and held and been worth millions today. I saw what Ethereum was at $10 and believed in the project and what it was doing. I could have invested $10k into ETH and held and had been worth millions today. I am not going to allow this to happen a 3rd time. I see what Radix is. I think I'm earlier into it than I was with BTC or ETH. Looking at what Radix is I think it can surpass Cardano which is a great project but not something I invested into it because I think it's just ETH on steroids. Radix solves all the problems of BTC and ETH and Uniswap. If they succeed it will be in top 5 within a few years. I do not plan on kicking myself in the ass over this. My investment is strong and I hope to have $2m+ worth of Radix by 2025. That's my goal. I continue to accrue Radix and I am buying more this week on this dip. I'll start selling my Radix when it's $10+. Before that it's diamond hands.

Looking at what Radix is I think it can surpass Cardano which is a great project but not something I invested into it because I think it's just ETH on steroids. Radix solves all the problems of BTC and ETH and Uniswap. If they succeed it will be in top 5 within a few years. I do not plan on kicking myself in the ass over this. My investment is strong and I hope to have $2m+ worth of Radix by 2025. That's my goal. I continue to accrue Radix and I am buying more this week on this dip. I'll start selling my Radix when it's $10+. Before that it's diamond hands.
How much do u plan on investing into this if u dont mind me asking? Is it over 10k? Over 20k maybe?

If we're talking about waiting for this to blow up in 5 yrs I'll probably be only $5k into this, not sure yet. I will go hard on crypto this bear market. If I get at least 1mil in 5 yrs then I'll be the happiest person ever, also the fact that I came from low working class family will make it much better

Been buying and selling EXRD on and off for a couple months now. Now I think I'm just gonna keep hodling. I see there are a few events coming up in next few months which should help the price somewhat.

And seeing Omni on board has also increased my confidence in this project.

Lower xx,xxx. Plan on buying more if it dips below 14c.

One criticism I have on this project is that their tokenomics are not very clear. Going by the information on CoinGecko, it seems that the current circulating supply is 734,834,633 / 4,410,000,000.

And then the max supply is 24,000,000,000.

Why is there such a huge disparity between circulating and max supply?

Are the 20 billion EXRD reserved for staking and/or dev rewards or some other purposes?

Quote:Do you have a specific goal in mind regarding how much you want to accumulate?

Positions can always change for my other crypto investments. Example is something might spike and I decide to trade to ETH and then buy more eXRD. I don't exactly have a target. What I have right now is good. Depends on dips too. I might DCA for example if we go to .14 or lower. I'm also close to the 100k eXRD which might be a good target. One more exchange will get me there.

Quote:If in the United States, what is the best way to buy some Radix this weekend or soon?

Metamask. But be aware a fee of $80-100 for one trade. So unless you can do a minimum of $1k it's likely not worth it. But a $5-10k investment is probably going to make that fee acceptable percentage.

If I purchase from Coinbase primarily, would the best approach be to purchase UniSwap coin, move that over to MetaMask/Uniswap and keep Radix in the Metamask location and have my seed/info saved ofc.

I am getting a newer Ledger Nano and reading up on a few things that may be a place I can store it as well?

I would plan on purchasing at least a decent amount....not 100K at once but over time probably if things seem to continue to climb slowly.

Fees is definitely a big OOF but oh well, those fees would be the last of my worries looking back in a few years if things pan out.

Would have to find a better long term solution for storage of radix. (Here is hoping it hits coinbase sometime soon here after then) Storing it on Metamask seems long term like it could be a problem. Metamask is decentralized and not custodial. It's a type of ETH wallet. You could even just turn your address into cold storage or import the seed into another application once eXRD is supported in other wallets.

Realistically when mainnet is released for eXRD it's not even going to be an ERC-20 token and you'll have to swap it for the actual eXRD. Gonna be easier imho on Metamask most likely to do the contract swap.

Quote:Am I mistaken or would the mcap of Radix have to be $14.2b for the token to be worth $1? (given 100% tokens are released by 0.43c)

I think that's about right. Take into account that's the cap of Uniswap. Also consider how the market for DeFi might drastically increase into the trillions in about five years. Then consider how far advanced Radix is over Uniswap and if they fulfill their roadmap it will be the best technology for DeFi.

Quote: Anyone knows why is it dumping and why people are selling?

I think it's because of a failed test yesterday during the livestream. Just a guess btw. Was rather humorous because the dev was taken aback by the failed test because he doesn't have versioning in his code and stated he didn't have the time to fix that right now. I literally watched him totally flumoxed for about 5 mins. But as a dev I understand that's how it is sometimes. This is why I'm fairly sure we are 2-3 years away from this working properly. It's being built from scratch basically.

Quote: Let's get this to the top 50 soon!

Won't happen as an ERC-20 token. That's not coming soon. I don't even think the swap is on a roadmap.

And to speak about that market cap and token distribution. I don't believe it to be an issue when DeFi will need to have about a $10T market cap for the overall industry and Radix leads the way with maybe 25% of all the activity.

All this I'm expecting and anticipating in about 5 years. I know this as surely as I knew BTC would hit $10k when it was $100 and as surely as I knew ETH would be $1k when it was $10.

If you don't have patience then this is not the right project for you. If get-rich-quick is 6 months in your mind and not 6 years then GTFO. Realistically I think it's a great investment of $10k to have $1m+ in 5 years. Anyone that thinks that's not a good deal is a moron.

Yes, I believe this is correct.

First Release: Olympia (previously called RPN-1)

This is the release we've been developing in earnest throughout 2020, with launch scheduled for the end of Q2 this year.

Olympia will mark the genesis of the XRD token, and holders of the current eXRD ERC-20 token will be able to swap them 1:1 for XRD. Our internal milestones for this release are called "drops" and we've just completed the second of our four planned drops. The end of the third drop will be the release of a public betanet that will allow node runners, users, and developers to explore how Olympia will function, without risking "live" tokens.

Right now you can withdraw it to any ERC-20 compatible wallet (MyEtherWallet for example) as far as I know. Also I think you can use Trust Wallet or Coinomi. When the mainnet is launched you will be able to swap eXRD for XRD in 1:1 rate but that's all I know.

In any case, save the seed.

Be wary, if they are on your Ledger they most likely will not be eligible for the swap when it occurs.

I trust that you will follow their channels to be alert of the swap date but just be sure to transfer back to MetaMask before the swap takes place.

I could be wrong, they might be eligible for the swap on Ledger's ecosystem but just a heads up. ?

Thank you man, that was honestly a thought that never crossed my mind!

I'll be using Bitfinex rather than MetaMask due to the fees but I'm assuming it won't make a difference for the swap once it becomes available.

I've been pretty inactive in the crypto scene as well as HF for the last 6-12 months so I've got myself a lot of catching up to do.

I think until they're on an exchange that doesn't screw us for $100 in a fee the price of the eXRD token won't make big moves.

I got my bag and I'm pleased. I'll throw another $10k into this if it drops under .12 though. So I don't mind these price levels.

My understanding of crypto/DeFi/Radix is very limited, but for the very mainstream user of crypto as an asset to buy stuff, I thought that Radix scalability is a huge game changer, isn't it? I mean according to Coingeek.com "and therefore the maximum scalability of Ethereum 2.0 will be maybe 3000 transactions per second". That is very limiting, Radix holds the current WR of "in transaction speed: 1.4 million transactions per second on a world wide network, without the use of centralized masternodes. Confirmations in 1-2 seconds."

With my, as earlier acknowledged, very limited understand - that seems like unfathomable difference that even the most novice user will feel.

Can anyone tell me if the launch of BetaNet on the 28th? will prove this WR?

Exactly. The ground-up build of their technology can change the game for DeFi in ways that everything else won't be able to touch potentially for years. That's a speculation but one I'm basing from my experience in the crypto-space. If in 2-3 years Radix pulls this off, it's going to make a lot of these 2nd-wave chains obsolete. Not all of them, but many of them. When we can do 1m TXN's a second and 2 second confirmations. That's VISA level and can spark a huge revolution in quick and cheap transactions that's decentralized and secure. It's what the world needs to function on the next level.

Every time I post something like this I want to plop another $5k into it. Maybe this weekend I'll do that.

The unlocking phase depends on 7-day SMA targets. The next release is when it reaches $0.19.

It is important to note along with the price and market cap, in the next few years and/or market cycles the market cap for Crypto currency as a whole will be much greater than the current i.e top coins could have a market cap of trillions.

I have no doubts the team will deliver and should be within the top 30 and it can still have the market cap of ETH even if it isn't within the top 10 etc. Visualise the bigger picture and how far the whole market has come from.

This is just my thoughts though, please do your own DD before investing.

I strongly agree with everything you said regarding where whole crypto scene is going. I just don't see why would we invest in radix now? Radix
Code Max Supply

24,000,000,000

Market Cap
$159,803,466

so radix gets #5 in market cap it will be 10-20x ?

this is financial advice.

Im in this big but don't know how long I am staying solely because of the supply. The more and more I look into it, the less confident I am in the price sky rocketing eventually. Gotta try and keep the diamond hands tho.

Omniscient - April 2, 2021, 11:15 am

Quote:Are you saying that market cap of radix will go up to 7,8bn that soon or i misunderstood something.

Current overall market cap of crypto is $2T. That's not enough for global commerce on the level required going forward. Basically Bitcoin itself will one day be worth $100T, that's 100x current value. Probably 10-15 years but potentially much sooner.

As the market grows and adoption occurs the winners in the crypto-space will be those most useful to global commerce. DeFi is explosive. I'm not sure if you understand exactly what it does but it's extremely powerful. It's going to alter everything. But current DeFi projects have certain problems and limitations that are all solved by Radix. Because Radix is that solution their market cap is going to explode. Current cap is $161m. Even with fully supply of 4.41T EXRD if the cap of Radix is $1T then that's a $2 price per token.

And if you think caps can't reach those levels then you haven't checked what's been happening historically. Market 1 year ago was about $185B. So we're about 10x from just one year ago.

This is about picking and choosing the winners of the future of crypto.

Radix doesn't have to pass Bitcoin or Ethereum. It just has to get into top 10 to hit some great multiples. In the next halvening it's entirely possible BTC could hit $1m.

I keep saying this is a LONG-TERM hold. That's not 3 months, that's more like 3+ years. How much would you have liked to get ETH when it was less than a $1?

Quote: I just don't see why would we invest in radix now?

Then don't invest now. Wait till it's $1.

Quote:How are early investors benefiting when coin price will be only doubled for someone who bought it while market cap is 100M and someone that bought it while market cap is 1B? (and it can take year, or two for that to happen).

And maybe that's your best argument that for a year or two you could make more profit in other crypto plays for short term gains.

For me personally it's about FOMO. I think when RADIX gets on a better exchange like RADIX and completes their token swap and other metrics it has potentially to shoot 100% overnight. It could 2-3x in a week and that's incredibly hard to time. So I've invested and I wait. I'm patient. Everyone has their own strategy and comfort levels. Maybe it's entirely possible that it's way too early to invest. That RADIX could be flat for another year while investments into BTC or whatever keep mooning.

I know the market is exploding right now. But it's a bubble waiting to pop. A lot of investors are eventually going to get hurt. What's going to last is the projects that push great tech solutions. I don't invest into hype. I invest into technology that solves problems. I invest in the best of class too when I can spot it early.

Hope that helps you.

Radix Counter-FUD for dummies

"That argument makes me go "Oh man tsc tsc smh". Why do people think that matters? Let's understand what's completely flawed in this argument.

Crypto investment space got used to some narratives, the "scarce supply" being one of them. Well, that's not completely wrong per se... That's where people see the most value in Bitcoin, for instance. But what does that mean or really imply? If Bitcoin supply was 21B instead of 21m, would that make a difference? The short answer is NO. Let's elaborate on the long answer.

What really makes the difference is that the supply is capped. It doesn't matter if is capped at 21 million, 21 Billion or 21 thousand, as long as they are very divisible. Let's see some examples.

At the time of this writing, BTC is priced at $45,977 with market cap of US$ 856,307,831,900 and a circulating supply of 18,624,700 bitcoins. If you multiply the circulating supply for the price, you get the market cap. You can also calculate the fully diluted market cap, as you know BTC is capped at 21 million, which gives figure of US$ 965,517,000,000.

What if in some parallel Universe reality BTC was capped at 21 Billion instead? Then you would get a price of \$45.977. Doesn't sound so exciting, right!? I want to own a BTC in the range of tens of thousands, that sounds more valuable. Tsc tsc smh. In fact it doesn't make a difference. The only thing that matters is the market cap, and the percentage of it you own. If you bought \$100,000 of bitcoin at the top of 2017 bull run, you paid ~\$20,000, getting 5 BTC. In this parallel universe where BTC would have a supply of 21B, assuming the same market cap, the same \$100,000 would buy you 5000 BTC. In both Universes you would have now \$229,885 right now. Why? Because in both cases you bought $\sim 2.38 \times 10^{-5}$ % of the fully diluted market cap.

What if you wanted to buy the same in Radix? Simply calculate the same percentage of the fully diluted market cap. In that case you would have to buy only ~5,714 eXRD, which at eXRD price right now @ 0.1376 would cost you the bargain of $786, because Radix market cap is still so low.

So, you can be sure if in some distant future, if Radix market cap grows to the current size of Bitcoin market, that would be worth the same $229,885.

The smallest BTC divisible unit (for now, as that could be decided to change in some distant future), called the Satoshi, is equivalent to 10^{-8} or 0.00000001 BTC. Currently, that divisibility is ok, because one Satoshi is still in the range of a hundredth of a cent. What if in some other parallel universe BTC was capped at 21,000 coins? In that case, one Satoshi would be worth ~$0.45, and the bitcoin divisibility would not be enough to represent the smallest dollar unit.

Are we on the same page now? The supply is just an arbitrary choice of where to put the decimal point.

Now, what about Ethereum? Ethereum at the moment doesn't have a capped supply and is an inflationary coin. Although that may change with EIP1559 or with Eth2 staking, but that's how it is right now. So any comparison with Ethereum market cap is misleading. You have to compare apples with apples, oranges with oranges, capped supply coins with capped supply coins. Fully diluted market cap with fully diluted market cap. Current market cap with current market cap. Don't fool yourself with misleading comparisons.

What have we learned today? The Radix capped supply is as scarce as bitcoin, providing one of the necessary economic bases for price appreciation in the future, that comes with adoption and demand. We'll continue to clarify every misleading argument or misinformation in the next articles. Stay tuned!!!"

That's not a good article. It's more opinionated and subjective than anything else. Supply does matter. In Bitcoin case unlike Radix there is deflation by the halvening. It's opposite for Radix because they'll release more EXRD as price increases. That's going to cause inflation where each EXRD will be worth less.

Overall long term though once the full supply is released then all is well and deflation should begin. But up to that point we have to consider it.

Kinda offtopic as it's not Radix related (currently working through the technical papers though), but..

How is Bitcoin (currently) deflationary? We currently have a block reward of 6.25. That's inflationary in my eyes.

Yes, the inflation is halving every ~ 4 years, but there still is inflation until the block reward is 0.

Limited supply != Deflationary

It isn't inflationary, we have a block reward of 6.25 and will be less every halving.

That and knowing we have limited supply means that it can't be inflationary, even the hash rate is regulated every 2 weeks

I don't think they did it wrong. CG shows eXRD circulating supply is 1.1bn out of the 4.41bn total. If SMA maintains $0.43, prior to mainnet (XRD) release, then there can only be 4.41bn eXRD in circulation. XRD is not eXRD. CG states max supply is 24bn.

Can you explain why you have come to the conclusion that the tokenomics and marketing "sucks"? What about the tokenomics suck?

Are you expecting them to market more speculation about how great Radix is GOING to be, because that's what they've done so far. They haven't got any product to offer yet. What else are you expecting them to do?

You must have done a huge amount of due diligence if you're holding 3m eXRD, which is worth around $480k at current prices, so I am interested in your thoughts.

I tend to agree. I think the tokenomics are well thought out and in line with the core principles of this project. Just because there's no forced scarcity doesn't mean the tokenomics are inherently shit, even if investment-wise that would mean less pure profit on paper.

And damn, someone's got a stack and a half.

$1 puts us in the top 10.... but first, it is SO hard to get in the top 10. Radix will really have to prove itself. Also, $1 per coin won't really be making anyone "rich" unless you got in early.

There's been a lot of confusion and mixed information regarding the tokenomics so I'll try to clear this up. This comes mostly from the Economics Whitepaper along with some questions in Telegram:

https://www.radixdlt.com/#white_papers

On page 13 of the Economics Whitepaper we see the Maximum supply is 24b, which is broken up into 4.41b eXRD and 19.59b XRD. This is likely why CMC shows a max supply of 4.41b, because that is technically the maximum supply for eXRD. It looks like CG has it right though, showing 24b as the max supply.

4.2b eXRD are released using a price-vesting unlock system as mentioned previously in this thread. This means the weekly moving average of the price of eXRD must cross certain price milestones in order to unlock the next set of tokens. Basically 5% more of the tokens are released with every $.02 increase of the weekly average until we get to $.43, at which point the last 5% are released to get a total of 4.2b eXRD. I believe we are currently at 35% unlocked ($.17 weekly moving average) which is 1.47b tokens, although this doesn't match the current supply on CMC and CG. Below is a picture of the schedule, which is on page 8 of the Economics Whitepaper:

Spoiler (Click to View)

The other 210m eXRD are used for Liquidity Incentives and marketing (pg 7), which gets us to 4.41b eXRD.

Now for the 19.59b XRD. On pages 16-17 of the Economics Whitepaper we can see this is broken down into 3 categories: 5.19b with mainnet, 12b network emission, and 2.4b for reserve for a stablecoin project. You can see this breakdown below:

Spoiler (Click to View)

The 5.19b with mainnet are unlocked following the same schedule as eXRD referenced above. It starts at 1% and every week will unlock the next level (5% every $.02) as long as the weekly moving average price of XRD permits. Once the release of XRD catches up to eXRD they will unlock alongside one another in parallel.

Then there's 12b from network emission, which I believe is their term for staking rewards. These are introduced via staking at a rate of 300m per year for 40 years ($300m * 40 = 12b$).

The last 2.4b XRD is for reserve for a stablecoin project (pg 15).

You can read pages 13-15 or the tables in the images above to get some further details about the purpose of certain portions of the supply. One is that the founders will retain 10% (2.4b XRD).

Therefore, the minimum requirements needed to reach the total 24b supply are a price of $.43 for one week and also 40 years time. While its nice that they have the price-vested system for the release of tokens, this only applies to 9.61b of the 24b supply. Another 12b are added outside the price-vested system, granted they are added via staking at a rate of 300m per year over 40 years.

Hopefully that clears up some confusion. You tell me if you think these tokenomics are sound.

This post is exactly what I've been saying this whole time. Even posted a spreadsheet summary that I got from the TG group which shows all of the above and how supply is released but apparently everyone chose to ignore it.

Thanks for structuring the post... Hope everyone is clear on it now.

Everyone needs to look at and understand the Economics white paper. If you don't, then you're causing yourself stress for no reason. It's your own fault for not understanding it before investing. You wouldn't need to panic if you took time to understand your investment.

(Mar 20, 2021 12:05 PM)Ace Boogie Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Yes and the current market cap is based on a 730m circulating supply. For context, they have only released 30% of the c4bn eXRD supply so far. This is dependent on price action 7 day SMA, see the econ paper for more info. There are a lot of unclaimed tokens suggesting there are some hardcore holders who's not actively looking at it. 3bn out of the c4bn belongs to the community, provided most early investors are hardcore holders, this should be fine.

When mainnet is launched, another 5.19bn supply is released, but of course these won't come into circulation unless the team and devs decide to do so. Emission is capped at 300m XRD for staking rewards per annum, on top of the (9.5bn released - albeit most won't be in circulation, see graph below).

FYI on supply, from the Radix Telegram (based on the Economics whitepaper)

I'm not saying any of this is an issue, but 70x is pretty unlikely unless we make it to top 10 this cycle, which is also pretty unlikely. Maybe a 20x sounds more reasonable given the supply?

(Mar 24, 2021 09:38 AM)Ace Boogie Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Check my post above for a proper summary on token distribution -

<https://hackforums.net/showthread.php?tid=6138789&pid=60649147#pid60649147>

FYI it is price vested. The full 9.5bn supply once mainnet kicks in won't be unlocked until the price hits 0.43$ and stays there for c.20 weeks.

From the point of the post I made above, I went on to not being able to justify an actual 20x unless the tokens don't come into circulation for a long time. A realistic price point would be $1-$3 (6 - 20x) range if it can get the same traction as Cardano (and current total market cap of crypto remains where it is now) but the higher end seems kind of unlikely unless it gets really hyped. That being said, you never know, this is just my thought process based on what I know, which I admit is probably not as much as some others might so interested to see other people's thoughts.

Also very surprised most people on this thread has aped into the coin without doing any of their own DD.

One thing that's nice about getting a LOT of early tokens is that if indeed staking comes into play and Radix does hit a decent milestone even .50 then staking your bag could become your residual income. Ugh....that just screams for "get rich quick". Why do you need to see big marketing for positive movements? Because you expect FAST PROFIT. So short-sighted it's a real shame. The way I see it. The longer that the project goes unnoticed and idle the longer I have to stack at a cheap price.

How often do you invest into a token then it skyrockets and the first thing you wish for is that you had bought more? Right now I look at Radix as a buy buy buy and likely so up till .30+ range.

I don't want Radix to market. I want them to develop. The better their technology is the more reliable their roadmaps are the more valuable the token becomes. I've never seen any reasonable blockchain company with a solid roadmap that hits markers and their value diminishes. It's a hallmark of a good investment when the company can do as they say they're gonna do.

I know a lot of you think that waiting 6 months or a year is incredibly long time to make profit. I think that's childish and an easy way to make risky investments by buying into hypes and upward trends.

Bleh....sickens me when I read about impatient investors that want to get rich quick. Fugg off with that nonsense.

I think a 20% drop is not a lot in this volatile market. Swings of 20% can happen both ways on any day. If it went up 20% I assume you wouldn't sell. So you shouldn't panic if it drops 20%. I'm short on ETH otherwise I'd invest another $2k at the .13 current price. Very attractive imho.

This is what I've been telling others who have invested, long term 20-30% doesn't matter. I bought at 0.1872 originally, then at 0.16, 0.15, 0.14 & now at 0.13.

I do not panic, I look at it positive, to me it's another great opportunity to get more at a discounted price.

The only gas fee would be the cost to send BTC to Bitfinex. If you already have BTC on Bitfinex you can just purchase it without a gas fee. Then their exchange trade fee which should only be 0.5% or something.

Exit strategy? I don't plan to exit from Radix. A better plan is to use DeFi to earn interest. Let's say Radix hits $5 one day. And I can earn 5% annual interest. Why would I sell my $500k in radix when I'm earning $25k a year just holding it?

Too many crypto investors have a price in mind that they'll sell at. If you stop doing that, you will obtain your wealth forever.

Wouldn't it be better to use some of the $500k to invest elsewhere? The S&P 500 for example has a higher % return than 5%. My parents invest in property and the minimum ROI for a property they buy is 7%.

I think there could be better places to use the $500k than keeping it all in Radix.

Edit: Obviously if you think Radix is going to climb to even higher prices you would hold, but going off just the 5% doesn't make much sense to me.

5% is conservative. And that's just interest. It doesn't take into account growth of Radix price.

And no one said have 100% in Radix. I'm earning between 6-30% on my holdings with staking.

The S&P one day will be crypto based on DeFi blockchain.

And yes, you can be a landlord but guess what...you don't pay property tax and they take your property. You get a tenant that doesn't want to pay rent, you have to evict them. If your property has the AC unit go out, that's up to you to pay to fix. For me 7% ain't worth any of that hassle when I can just stake crypto for the same or even more.

Property has disadvantages but so does everything, you can wake up to the crypto market -20-30% drop. It's all preference really, but like you said not having 100% in anything is the best thing to do.

Price action will not happen until LM is done and stake system is open IMHO. But most important thing DUMP will not happen just like other shit projects. At bear market %90 of Defi projects will be gone just like 2017 ICO's. Radix safe space for bear market but if you are looking quick profits definitely go for BSC projects these days but if dump starts results will be fatal for most of people.

Your posts in this thread are jarring. A long term hold isn't daily price action, which you constantly seem to be worrying about. Why do you want the price to be higher right now if it is a long term hold for you?

I think you're too invested in this coin if you're waking up every day thinking what is the eXRD price today. Maybe sell some of it so you're less stressed.

Radix hasn't even got a mainnet yet. How can you expect price action before that at the earliest?

(Apr 11, 2021 09:02 AM)SIM-1866423 Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Price action will not happen until LM is done and stake system is open IMHO. But most important thing DUMP will not happen just like other shit projects. At bear market %90 of Defi projects will be gone just like 2017 ICO's. Radix safe space for bear market but if you are looking quick profits definitely go for BSC projects these days but if dump starts results will be fatal for most of people.

Listen, I love radix but I don't know if it is right to call it a safe space during a bear market...

(Apr 11, 2021 09:08 AM)Ace Boogie Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Your posts in this thread are jarring. A long term hold isn't daily price action, which you constantly seem to be worrying about. Why do you want the price to be higher right now if it is a long term hold for you?

I think you're too invested in this coin if you're waking up every day thinking what is the eXRD price today. Maybe sell some of it so you're less stressed.

I'll say it again:

Radix hasn't even got a mainnet yet. How can you expect price action before that at the earliest?

So let me get this straight... you don't want to see the price go up? Lol. Why wouldn't I want to see the price higher? I'm not too invested as this is money I can afford to lose, however, all I've seen this do since I bought in is go down. There are so many projects where the fundamentals are good, but that doesn't guarantee a project works out. It's pretty obvious that in crypto, you should always be watching the projects you are in because at any moment it can become dead. With radix, I don't believe that to be the case, but there are no guarantees.

Nowhere did I state something false. Price action is sucking and volume has been slowly dropping day by day.

Also, don't talk to me like you know anything about me and my investments. I don't need your advice. I am simply posting my thoughts on a FORUM, more specifically a thread where we talk about radix.

Lastly, I will ride with this until at least $10

Well it is for me :) Radix won't affect from market that much and gradually increase it price, perfect for long-term.Of course it's my opinion i am not some genius trader so everyone should do their own research.

My assumption that you're too heavily invested came from the fact that you're complaining about price or supply every day. It appears to me that you haven't done enough DD or simply don't understand the project / the roadmap enough if you're here complaining about pRiCe aCTiOn on a daily basis on a project that is yet to accomplish anything.

It really isn't smart for anyone to be watching their investment value on a daily basis (do you not have anything better to do?) because they'll end up like you. Disappointed and upset (because it's lower than you bought at - but why didn't you DCA?) or euphoric (because it's higher than you bought at) but at the end of the day, all you've done is affect your emotions.

Are you going to sell if the price is going up in the short-term? Are you going to sell if the price goes down in the short-term? If no to either, then why are you watching price action on a daily basis?

What are you going to do if the price dips to $0.01 tomorrow? Call the project dead, just because of a whale dumping? You should be watching what the team are doing, instead of watching the price.

Why are you surprised price and volume aren't going up? The project is currently an ERC-20 token without anything to offer at this stage of it's life. Now, the point in my last post on this was very clear but let me ask you again, how can you expect there to be price action when not even mainnet is out?

I'm not giving you advice. I'm posting my thoughts in response to your jarring comments in a discussion forum.

That's very true for Radix. I don't think we'll see movement for a long time. I'm personally fine with that. eXRD is not going to move with the rest of the market. It's going to move when it reaches their milestones on their own roadmap. Movements will happen once it's on Binance and the token swap has started.

That's encouraging. I think we'll continue to see whales touch substantial sums of eXRD. Token swap will drive this price 2-5x within 48 hours. Getting into exchanges will do the same. Looking at a 5-10x return when those metrics are met.

Radix is preparing for TRILLIONS in volume. That's what DeFi needs.

(Apr 16, 2021 08:39 PM)Zoomers Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Like more supply than usual or what? Doesn't seem that bad

CoinGecko showed both the max supply of eXRD (4.41b) and the total supply of eXRD + XRD (24b), so I think the overall max supply was misinterpreted by some as being only 4.41b. This is bad for price predictions because if you think the project should get to a certain marketcap then you can calculate how much each token will be worth by dividing your targeted marketcap by the supply. But if the supply is actually 6x larger than you thought it was, the price per token for that same target marketcap will be 1/6 what you thought it was.

It will take several years to get to 10b tokens, with most of the rest coming in at 300m per year. So assuming a supply of ~10b in 3 years, ~11b in 6 years, ~12b in 9 years, etc gives us plenty of time to grow without the circulating supply becoming excessive imo.

Yes, but 12b are released at a rate of 300m/year for 40 years starting with mainnet. So it will take awhile for a lot of the tokens to enter circulation.

It's nature of market but i don't think it will be case.If price hits 10$+ market cap will be huge i don't even think 340m$ will be a lot in this case.Also lets not forget stake system rewards will be here for next 40 YEARS.Also radix will be whole ecosystem and a lot of project will use radix tech, this is literally retirement fund for most of people if you dont want to risk your money on these pump & dump days(just like 2017).At this point i am not even consider this project somehow can fail, developers are really well funded so team wise everything is cool.Also Dan even has plans if he suddenly dies or something bad happen to him(yes i ask lmao).

Some thoughts about how the price of XRD might benefit from a killer dapp.

As Radix's business model currently works, access to RPN is given away for free. What is needed is some way to require dapp developers to pay for using RPN, and that this mechanism somehow increased the price of XRD, rather than flowing to either the Foundation or RadixDLT Ltd. But wait, this is already how it works. Dapps pay a "small" fee to use RPN. This fee is burned, decreasing supply. In a few years when a killer dapp runs at scale, it may generate millions of TPS and hence lots of fees to be burned. As an order of magnitude calculation consider that 1M TPS at $.001 is $1000. There are about 32 M seconds in a year so this is a highly significant annual burn of 32 Billion dollars. How many XRD? Well that depends on price. An extremely large price of $100 for an XRD is needed to get the burn rate per year down to only 316 million XRD, comparable to the annual staking rewards emission. But even this is unsustainable, so something will have to give.

Can XRD price scale to levels of coins such as ETH? I'm already invested, so this question is critical at the moment. I think this is a question to come in the future, happy to hear everyone's opinions.

Also, slightly off topic are any HF developers planning to build anything in RDX ecosystem?

Someone buys 10,000 EXRD through me.

Token sale will end up making it 14,000.

Buyer receives 15% extra for free (10,000 + 1,500)

I keep the remaining 25% bonus. (2,500)

Both parties end up happy

Happy to also help those that have no access to this buy in under the same terms as Cameron. Shout if interested.

Price will be set as per the market price on the day of the sale.

There is a cap of $10k USD per person for this sale so I can only accumulate $10k USD worth in total.

We'll have to work out how the bonus is paid out as it is time vested.

Of course you have to note this is subject to being part of the sale (i.e. it may be unavailable if oversubscribed).

That being said, to be brutally honest I'm probably just going to grab this offer for myself.

Hern - April 23, 2021, 11:32 am

So maybe I missed the ball here but...

reading more about the radix stake, I have a good $1500 put into just having the eXRD coin atm and notice that if I put in all of it to stake on the official radix website, I can get a decent large amount bonus back, is that true?

Or is it not worth staking this or what downside is it to stake what I have in the current rewards program?

EDIT: Think I figured it out...I would have to do USDC 50% of what I have in EXRD already so would need to basically put up another $1500 to match my Radix...with only 28 days left in this stake rewards system it seems it may not be worth even doing...

Much confused, think I just paid $8 ETH in fees to just connect my metamask wallet to even look into it further but didn't transfer any of my eXRD at least lol
I should read more next time before any actions oof

reading more about the radix stake, I have a good $1500 put into just having the eXRD coin atm and notice that if I put in all of it to stake on the official radix website, I can get a decent large amount bonus back, is that true?

Or is it not worth staking this or what downside is it to stake what I have in the current rewards program?

In long term, I believe this will hit $100. If supply is 10BN, we should see this coin have atleast 1TR market cap if overall crypto is 100TR market. We also shouldn't forget that bunch of coins will be lock for smart contracts like they are for ETH today.

I'm hoping for the opposite. If BF are giving out free Radix, I'm hoping that the excess eXRD gets dumped and we see the price drop for a little bit. The closer we get to $0.10 the more likely I am to throw a lot more money in, and the more likely I am to win some of my friends over who are sitting on the fence.

My boss actually asked me to buy him $10,000 worth, but I'm not touching that. Investing for your employer sounds like a recipe for disaster.

Not sure it's going to go the way you want. Look at the level of interest. For context, this means someone who pledged 10k USD would have gotten around 15k EXRD (21.8% of the pledge) and that's it. So unless there's a mass dumping by a lot of people, I doubt it.

Let's see how it plays out.

Projects like Chainlink, THETA, XMR, ENJ and Antshares took literally year(s) to break the $1 mark. Then and only then do you start to see alot of upward momentum within the price change, historically this has been shown many times. Until then the price will most likely stay put or drift around under $1 for a long time. It's not abnormal. The Radix token release was in october and is still in its ERC-20 phase.

I don't think people realize how early stage this is, if you did you shouldn't flinch if the price would stay between $0,12-$0,9 for the next year.

The dips you keep worrying about today are going to be totally irrelevant in 5 years time. Imagine you stressed over a dip in ETH that was in 2015-2016 when it was under $1.

Imho there is no reason to expect a big price change anytime soon.

This token will however be a big patience tester for alot of people and it's clear that some people here might not deal well with that reality.

Pledged $900 on the catalyst sale on Bitfinex the other day.

Turns out they only had 2 million eXRD available and over 9 million was "pledged"

TL;DR

Unreal just pledged and paid $900 for $200 worth of Radix

I was all for this but its clear the team of radix and bitfinex are both involved and just seems really slimy of a situation. All the extra pledge money is basically "donations" of probably $1 million +

Looking like I won't be getting any bonus radix since the supply is so low.

I also paid my friend a fee for getting me into the token sale since I am USA and was not able to do it myself.

Not sure if coming out ahead would be the best way to put it simply because I converted USD to USDC and only was able to buy 1/5th of the amount I wanted. The rest I just threw into ETH honestly and with some additional fees here and there I think I will obviously come out ahead in the coming months or years since I am doing nothing but holding everything but definitely done doing token sales if they say they have a limited small supply as its almost a waste of time at that point and I could have just used uniswap with the crazy high fees and came out in about the same amount lol

Definitely still on my goal/search to get up to 50K maybe even 100K radix before it gets too crazy high but feel I have a good 1 year to do so and get a little at a time. Knowing that uniswap is still the only best way to get it via USA it just sucks each time when I want to buy some

If it goes mainnet in July imho you want to stock up in early June. That's not that far away. Could be .24 or higher by then. And it's not so bad on uniswap if you're getting 50k tokens ($8k w/ $100 fee). The fee doesn't kill you as bad because of the percentage.

EDIT: Today buying 2 more ETH worth of eXRD on Uniswap.

Are you transferring your holdings to the wallet? just curious if i should keep them on gate.io or their wallet.

selling my one eth for this!@

Their wallet is a beta test network. You technically can't transfer the eXRD token to it until after the swap. Maybe end of summer.

If you have a substantial amount I wouldn't ever recommend holding money on an exchange. And yes, the ledger nano's are great hardware wallets in my experience.

After the DB hack and leak, I would not suggest using a ledger. They covered it up for so long. Trezor is a better option imo Ledger is a better option for altcoins. And they got hacked as in lost their clients sensitive data like phone number address. No biggie. The wallet per se wasn't hacked.

So losing sensitive data like ADDRESSES, PHONE NUMBERS etc is no biggie? That's probably the worst thing that can happen besides losing your coins. The only reason I say to stay away from ledger, is how they handled the db hack. Trezor supports a ton of alt coins too. You can store Radix on your trezor. As long as its supported on the ETH network.

Data and addresses, phone numbers etc are easily stolen from your food delivery companies or facebook or whatever so? Nothing new. I don't see it as a biggie. And there's also the logic that if they got hacked that way now they improved their security right? Just a speculation tho.

I don't own neither Trezor nor Ledger, in fact i am still deciding which one to buy. But i am like 60% into Ledger, 40% Trezor, might chose Ledger in the end.

Yeah i know. But still. I don't see how that will do much harm. The hacker per se has to get in contact with ya to squeeze more information. It's not enough to find out your address / phone number in order to hack your crypto lmao.

I understand that it was unprofessional from LEDGER to be hacked and all and yeah i am aware it makes them look bad but if you could think it, it didn't do much. The hacker prolly just sold that stolen data for some $.

So .. seems like everyone worry about mainnet and token release(price concerns) let me make it clear for all of you guys.

The mainnet supply is released to:

*Radix foundation

*Team

*Network subsidy (also foundation)

*Dev incentives (also foundation)

All "normal" buyers already got their tokens in the eXRD supply. Therefore no dump risk from that side. The community supply (of eXRD supply) was bought with BTC in 2014. So nothing to worry about that release and of course these tokens are also price vested.

Rewards are fixed for 40 years at 300m XRD per year for proof of stake.

The TOTAL possible unlocked XRD tokens on day 1 of main net are 12 billion tokens.

Out of that we have ~8.4 billion tokens that most likely wont be staked (founder retention, network subsidy, stable coin reserve, dev incentives, etc...).

So assuming all vested tokens are unlocked and staked this gives us approximately 3.642 billion tokens staked competing for 300m tokens per year resulting in 8.2% APY.

Since we currently only have 35% supply unlocked, if all are staking it means 23.5% APY.

Since many people won't stake, either since they want their tokens to remain liquid or due to tax reasons.... I think 30-40% is more than likely.

They are not using "Solidity" they create entire new language "scrypto" based on Rust. We can easily say these long years for because of effort to delivering one solid product not because of laziness. Now we have solid proof cassandra(-The Cassandra network will be an implementation of the Cerberus protocol which is the protocol Radix will be using to allow it to scale atomic cross shard transactions pretty much infinitely-) working %100 at this point which is huge because it is one of its kind(which will ensure our position in top 5 coins easily IMHO).

More info about scrypto : <https://t.me/RadixDevelopers/4770>

Stake rewards formula :  $300m * \text{your stake} / \text{total staked per year}$

I just saw on Radix Discord an interesting discussion about the end of incentive program - we should see a significant amount of people, who are in this for short term gains, dumping their tokens, so the price might go down significantly for some time.

This should be a good time to buy some more tokens for long term investors. The incentive program ends around 16th May (180 days from November 17th 2020).

Well i am not tech guy but let me list some of benefits from this parthnership;

*We are considering a variety of ways to engage eXRD holders, from airdrops to NFT rewards to premium access. All of our plans are still up in the air at this time, but we promise to make it exciting for everyone!

*Ethereum apps can be ported over to Radix through Notoros

*All of the transactions that are processed by Notoros dApps must first be processed by the Radix ledger, and thus users have to pay XRD fees.

Future is bright and NOTOROS is first every Dapp after from now on will boost Radix ecosystem. Please keep in your mind radix is not just some random project it started at 2013. Dan found out blockchain is limited at 2012 They made entire new language "SCRYPTO" rather than just using Solidity. IMHO just stake (after mainnet it will be available) and forget until RPN-3. If anyone wondering technical details about NOTOROS there is AMA questions on official telegram page.

UPDATE

This is why I will never again buy or support buying a Ledger product ever again. It's a SHIT company. Wasted hundreds of dollars on multiple devices that should be updated, supported, and secured FOREVER but they are NOT. They want you to buy the latest version every couple years. I need to secure my crypto for DECADES.

btw, I am planning on buying 2-3 ETH worth more. Glad price is low and stable. The more I read on their website, social media, and in their PDF papers the more I want. Radix is fuck-all-powerful and is gonna rock the crypto world if they can stay on schedule with development. Looking at 2024+ for a huge return. I am patient as fugg.

So USA still needs uniswap, correct?

I am seeing Gate.io sorta allows for USA or no? I am in process of trying to go through KYC with ID pending and seemed as long as I do not live in New york or some other state it might let me?

Obviously I would rather go Uniswap if I spend money in Gate.io and they freeze my account so fees are better than losing all my radix just that I know after time passes uniswap will not be the only place to buy radix from and I do not want to miss that boat when it happens!

"I just saw on Radix Discord an interesting discussion about the end of incentive program - we should see a significant amount of people, who are in this for short term gains, dumping their tokens, so the price might go down significantly for some time.

We should pool for a bulk buy. I'll be happy to middleman it. An eXRD token send is about $20 fee. A single swap can be $200. It's currently an ERC20 token (Ethereum wallet) so any Ethereum address can hold the tokens. If you've connected MetaMask you can hold it on that same address.

"Rewards are fixed for 40 years at 300m XRD per year for proof of stake.

The TOTAL possible unlocked XRD tokens on day 1 of main net are 12 billion tokens.

Out of that we have ~8.4 billion tokens that most likely wont be staked (founder retention, network subsidy, stable coin reserve, dev incentives, etc...).

So assuming all vested tokens are unlocked and staked this gives us approximately 3.642 billion tokens staked competing for 300m tokens per year resulting in 8.2% APY.

Since we currently only have 35% supply unlocked, if all are staking it means 23.5% APY.

Since many people won't stake, either since they want their tokens to remain liquid or due to tax reasons.... I think 30-40% is more than likely.

Surely you don't need to tax if you never sell your staking rewards though right?

You get capital gains tax on what you hold that increases in value, technically, the rewards from staking would be classed as income and taxed accordingly, as far as I'm aware.

Capital gain tax in the UK at least is only when you sell an asset, staking isn't paying us in fiat money. Idk either, im assuming it's similar to stocks.

No one would have an issue if they never sold/converted to FIAT - but reality ends up in the investor wanting FIAT given it's the world's common factor.

Just offshore via a holding LTD & operations LTD - able to legally reduce tax to 4.95% if done right. (the % I stated is for my jurisdiction, but there's less too)

Incorrect. It is subject to income tax, see my post above.

No on your Ltd company point, that does not work. This is a common misconception. There are anti avoidance rules in place to counter that.

1) The Ltd company will more than likely be subject to UK tax by way of central management and control.

2) Even if it isn't, there are anti avoidance rules that could attribute the off-shore company income directly to UK resident individuals who stand to benefit from it.

It's not something you should easily disregard (or think you can get away with).

Well the issue is that it's somewhere on the blockchain and it's publicly available to analyse.

How did the funds get into your hardware wallet?

If there is at any point a link to a KYC'd exchange and the trail to your hardware wallet, who's to say that HMRC will not eventually get to a point where they're easily able to put that information together with data analytics? It's probably not even that hard.

For example, you bought ETH on your KYC'd account on Coinbase. You sent the ETH to your Metamask. You swapped it for EXRD and that went into your Hardware wallet. You get staking rewards on this wallet. All of this is easily available to see on Etherscan.

Coinbase and most exchanges share information with authorities.

EDIT: I'm not saying you should or should not do anything but be careful whatever you decide to do.

I wasn't specifying on UK (however can still be done | Example: via Isle of Man ) - look up Non-DTA countries.

Avoidance is not what I'm specifying here (my first sentence was directed at 100% hodling) - as a business you can construct it in a legal way.

It's all very confusing, imagine you hold 100k coins and XRD hits $1, lets say a 30% Staking rewards, you pay your tax on the $30k and XRD crashes to $0.50 you've just paid income on something you've not got if you don't sell. Tax on staking is forcing you to sell your rewards :(

I've bought all my EXRD with BTC on bitfinex with no KYC, so I think I'll be okay. I'm debating whether to stake or HODL now.

Edit: shit I did buy my parents eXRD through Coinbase & my brother bought his own through Coinbase, both sent straight to Bitfinex (Non KYC) and bought eXRD with it. Unless they contact Bitfinex I should be ok.

At this point you can realise a loss and offset it in the future if you've overpaid taxes on your earnings.

But yeah you essentially pay for something you may not have but can recoup the difference in the future.

For example, you bought ETH on your KYC'd account on Coinbase. You sent the ETH to your Metamask. You swapped it for EXRD and that went into your Hardware wallet. You get staking rewards on this wallet. All of this is easily available to see on Etherscan.

Coinbase and most exchanges share information with authorities.

EDIT: I'm not saying you should or should not do anything but be careful whatever you decide to do. And how do you know its your wallet address or you sent it to someone or you got hacked

Hi guys, quick update LP rewards are finished so which means there will be no more reward from liquidity program but people still needs to complete their 90days to receive all rewards without loss. Too much people are start to leave liquidity which means price impact will be really high after everyone leave (there will be still 100k$ liquidity by foundation if everyone leaves) what i am trying to saying if you want buying bulk consider doing it before mainnet otherwise you will not able to buy without huge price impact.

You can buy it on Uniswap and Bitfinex.

If BitFinex is available in your country, you can purchase from there. Otherwise, you would have to do a swap. You can see the whole list here: <https://coinmarketcap.com/currencies/radix/markets/>

If you are thinking about doing a swap, I would suggest to look into Omni thread about group buy.

Uniswap, Bitfinex or Gate.io

On Uniswap, you'll have to pay for fees quite a bit, so if you can use Bitfinex, that is the best method atm if you are buying it yourself.

Their tokenomics is a little questionable. This is a very long term hold.

Mick567 - May 23, 2021, 1:24 am

Seen the below posted in the TG chat for those concerned with price action in the event of a downtrend in the market. Probably the best case scenario for long term investors.

I don't think Radix will flourish just yet anyways until developers can create on the platform and / or bigger exchange listings is when we may start seeing things move. Hold LONG.

Quote:For those of us who are long in radix with a long time vision and who don't have locked tokens. A bear market now would be our best scenario. No more unlocks for 3 years  $\approx \pm 30c/o$  apy on staking + more opportunity to accumulate of market. For public sale token holder with locked tokens, having more unlocks or not, will not effect accumulation via staking.
It's a Win Win.

its not even very its very very very or atleast until all tokens are unlocked then we wait like a couple of months for consolidation or down trend then we go up.

Looking at the exrd/btc pair ive been hesitant to put more.

My thesis on exrd was wrong I thought that it would be able to weather corrections, but maybe its cause the LM is ending, but who knows.

Overall great token, but the tokenomics really doesn't benefit early adopters as other coins like bitcoin are already proven and still provide the returns/less risk.

Instead of breaking the rules by making a new account and posting, maybe you should just DM him. Omni is telling you, this coin will be great but it is a LONG term hold, you repeatedly posting statements that make it seem like it'll start pumping tomorrow will only cause disappointment to yourself especially and others.

This pump culture is what causes the extreme volatility in the markets and causes people to lose money.

"They wanted to solve scalability since 8 years. The DeFi focus came later in 2019 with the current iteration Cerberus which supports atomic composability. The previous iteration Tempo didn't support atomic composability, but they realised that this is very important. Besides that, at it's core Radix is general purpose. DeFi is the most dominant use case currently. However, actually you can use Radix for everything."

Hmm, just realised there is a minimum required for staking. Fyi smaller holders, I'd recommend holding  $\geq 100k$  tokens to be on the safe side so you can stake straight away once mainnet is released.

I think the exact figures are still yet to be confirmed by the team.

I doubt the requirement would be around 100K, It's usually to avoid network spamming so maybe around 1000 XRD

Don't you think a $10k hold for minimum staking is only for large holders? I'm fairly sure that they want to avoid $10 staking. Minimum probably gonna be a lot lower than 100k tokens. Also if value rises to say .25 in mainnet this summer that's an even harder number to reach. I'd say a better min for staking is 10k or even just 1k eXRD. Currently affordable and as the token value increases likely still within reason.

I'm sure Dan and the team already have an idea of what they'll set for min staking anyways.

That's true I didn't consider not being able to stake them, I'm just thinking of the price action tracking the real token. I guess you could swap them through a DEX at some point in the future to completely avoid KYC.

Hmmm...

"As the Olympia version of the Radix mainnet does not yet have Radix Engine v2 or Scrypto, we are unable to provide trustless bridging services until after the Babylon release of the Radix mainnet. In the interim, to provide this ongoing 2-way bridge service, current regulations say that we must collect KYC information for those who use Instabridge directly. This is just like how minters of wBTC have to provide KYC in that system."

So seems like you can just wait for the swap. Eventually they'll hopefully have trustless bridging and swapping to native Radix.

Maybe fuserleer can give us a better statement for us on this subject.

Babylon's main-net is expected to hit around 2023, then we will be losing lot of staking rewards, I personally don't have a problem with KYC. It's understandable,
They mention

Users and developers on open decentralized networks like Radix have to make these choices for themselves, but many projects see this as a huge approaching problem for DeFi usability. DeFi has given us the ability to use any DeFi service we want from a single wallet and therefore, DeFi is effectively single sign-on for finance – but this huge benefit is diminished if regulation would eventually mean that we would have to go through KYC over and over again for each DeFi service that requires it!

Rather than solving this problem only for Instabridge, we decided that it was time to provide a unified solution so that Radix builders who choose to be regulatory compliant can focus on their dApp, and users of those dApps can connect frictionlessly. We call this solution Instapass. Once a user has provided KYC documents in Instapass, they will in the future have the option to share this information with DeFi and other services rather than repeating the same steps over and over. Instapass is being built with bank-grade data security standards, integrating with industry-leading KYC provider Jumio, and drawing on our own team's past experience building and operating secure systems that manage sensitive personal information.//

I read their full blog post about Instabridge and Instapass. I think it's a good read and I understand what they are trying to do. However, I can't help but feel their attempt at regulatory compliance to appeal to Wall Street falls flat on the fact they are trying to be a DeFi project.

DeFi is DECENTRALIZED FINANCE....KYC/AML eventually will be destroyed by freedoms that crypto and DeFi can offer. Their blog post reads more like capitulation to Wall Street and Big Brother more than anything else.

KYC is a legit threat to our freedom. They use these laws and regulations to infringe on our Rights. Sad to see Radix falling into line with Big Brother, but they are not the only ones.

Radix built their project from the ground up with a 100 trillion dollar market in mind. They planned their goals effectively for the most part. But I think they failed when it comes to privacy.

You can probably sense my disappointment.

I suppose this is going to be an issue if many of the DApps built on the Radix network forcibly requires some form of KYC. Then again, nothing is stopping anyone from cloning that very same DApp and creating a non-KYC version.

I am not quite sure how to interpret this as a whole but you are right in saying that it does appear as if they're bending their knees to the proposed KYC/AML changes on DeFi platforms - <https://www.coindesk.com/fatfs-new-guidance> [?]

I think Radix is wrong that the winners will be the technology that caters to Wall Street. I think the winners are those snubbing Wall Street and Big Brother. Do you really believe in that?

No authoritarian/totalitarian/dictatorship country will allow for that (China, Russia, etc.), surveillance countries (like USA) will never allow for that, UE will never allow for that because of things like AML laws.

Radix has good strategy, they are going for CeFi and DeFi markets, and allowing for both types of dApps (requiring and not-requiring KYC).

Cryptos will be hit hard with regulations in coming years. People thinking "fugg compliance" will change their approach very quickly (or just abandon the project).

Wrong.

We get them when they realize there's money to be made. Radix gains no leverage by adding KYC, just pisses off their user base.

Bailing on Radix, like I've seen suggested, seems drastic. However, If the Radix team thinks they're getting my personal information they can fuck right off. There will be plenty of ways to get XRD without KYC, they're just pissing us off and making us jump through hoops now to get there.

Bullshit news but still a promising project. Just.. disappointing too.

it's not mentioned nowhere that using features requires a KYC. I would'nt be surprised if in the future they add an option allowing them to freeze any suspicious tokens.

Surely that would be the complete opposite of Defi?

They say in the article you can go through bitfinex to avoid the KYC.

Meh ... unfortunately I don't have full visibility of every press release, public statement etc at Radix anymore, I need sleep from time to time.

However, crafting the below statement to convey the strategy here is tough, so not sure how I would actually change it without it turning into a full on manifesto!

"If we want the big institutions to play in DeFi and bring the billions of dollars of assets they manage into the ecosystem, we have to make DeFi work for their regulatory requirements."

Instabridge will serve a few purposes over the long term and ultimately becomes a service in its own right that people are free to use as a single source of verified KYC for any other service you may want to use. KYC is the bane of my life, as I'm sure it is yours. So many places have my dox I'm amazed I don't wake up each morning with a gun to my head and some chad asking for my private keys. Much more ideal that one single place has them, and everyone else can trust that source of KYC info.

Right now though, its a solution to swapping eXRD -> XRD prior to us having the features in the later mainnet releases to do this without a "3rd party". Because it will be ran by us (or a subsidiary) we need to do KYC otherwise I end get in trouble and spend time with Bubba and his pals in the showers.

You don't have to use it. Bitfinex are offering the service too where you don't need to do KYC and there will be others as time goes on.

Also important, you don't need KYC for anything else in the Radix network that is native to the protocol such as running a node or sending transactions etc, that would be suicide.

That cleared up, let me tackle the larger picture here ...

If you want to build something DeFi right now, you use Ethereum, end of story. The developer base, user base, and network value overall is huge.

We on the other hand are on the back foot, a Bugatti Veyron's top speed means nothing without good roads to drive it on, we need roads.

The "build it and they will come" kinda mentality that Terra has only works if you have a solid user base and your product is unique to market, if what you have isn't unique, everyone just stays where they are unless there is another incentive for them to move.

Fast growth for us looks kinda like a closed feedback loop that we can drive fast which goes something like value -> developers -> apps -> users -> rinse & repeat

We already have a lot of focus on developers with Scrypto etc coming in later releases, so they can build quickly and securely, which of course leads to apps and hopefully userbase growth. If we left it at that, and allowed it to grow organically, it might be enough, but there are other incentives for developers (and users too) that we wouldn't be targeting and that's value growth.

A network of high value incentivises developers further as there is revenue to be made and it gives both developers and users confidence to use the network. If it was shit, it wouldn't be worth anything.

If we want to "win" we have to throw everything at catching Ethereum, which means we want to suck value into the network from everywhere, retail & non-retail. We simply can't do the latter without providing some form of regulatory alignment to give them some surety, otherwise they end up as Bubba's friends too, or simply (and safer) don't use the network.

We can't boil the ocean on our own, so sensible compromises that assist us getting to the end goal of a boiled ocean are order of the day.

Ignoring what it'll be used for at this moment - the article is effectively saying Instapass will be used in the network going forward.

To be honest, the following is just a thought - I haven't a clue how this would work in practise but this is how I expect it may play out.

It all depends on how the future of Defi is going to operate amidst government attacks [by way of regulations] in the future. Other protocols and their developer ecosystem are probably trying to find a solution this problem, which I imagine is why this is being proposed to be used in the future at Radix. Whilst I am not 100% certain other protocols are facing similar problems, on the assumption that they are, the article (and Dan above) is pointing out that other protocols may struggle with users having to do KYC on various different DApps (multiple times which is less secure and may not be practical etc etc) [if developers make it a requirement due to regulatory scrutiny] so this Instapass solution here is effectively just a one time thing which can be used throughout the network, should the future for Defi involve some form of compliance to actually be successful.

If developers (say some are institutions who want to build on Radix and require by law to have KYC done) forcibly require a user to have an Instapass verification to use their DApp, that will force those who want to use that Dapp to have KYC'd on Instapass before being able to use that DApp.

I think it makes sense to attract developers who are more regulatory compliant to build on the network. If the market doesn't like those particular DApps that require Instapass, they're not going to use it.

You're not required by the Radix network to use Instapass but you may be required to have done so by some DApps.

I'm sure any open source project that makes Instapass/KYC a requirement could just be cloned by someone else who can create a non-KYC/non-Instapass version anyway.

Will all the developers on Radix make Instapass a requirement for all DApps? Probably not. Only those that want to be compliant, mainly institutions.

All in all, having kind of digested how it may work, I think this isn't as bad as how people are painting it to be in this thread (and what I had initially thought). It's a potential solution to those who want to be compliant. We don't know what exactly will be done by the developer ecosystem but it appears to just be an option for those who have to be compliant.

I can see the approach, because it'll be hard for serious developers to simply avoid regulations in the long run. Of course the only issue that the crypto economy is divided in this and the majority probably don't want this to be the future.

When you create regulation into your system, imho you are inviting it to be required. Example is chat apps that didn't have encryption from day one. When they did add it the US Justice Department wanted keys or at least the app developer a backdoor for them. What's going to stop a government from telling Radix that since they have KYC as part of their technology to require it and remove it as optional. This is a very real possibility. A few new regulations, SEC changes and bingo, a project like Radix will REQUIRE KYC/AML for usage. They can do this and I'm willing to bet that by Radix making it easier for them to do it they will. I wonder how Radix will achieve decentralized lending? I think this question is more in regards to de-fi than Radix but since Radix is aiming to be a pioneer in Defi, I thought I will ask it here, maybe Dan or someone like Omni could give their opinion.

I understand that platforms like Block-fi lends at 4.5% APY in return they ask for a collateral and the loan amount should not exceed 50% of collateral value but in real world, if you get a house mortgage you only have to pay 20% as down payment and sometimes even lesser, because they have your data, credit score and stuff so they happily give the loan.

How would defi achieve lending without asking for such big collaterals.

The bank/mortgage firm also take over your housing documents so they are safe from the risk of losing the money. I don't understand how would this be possible in a DEFI. I think this question could be a thread in it's own.

The answer is very simple - risk management practices will be the same. As a lender you need to have a way of assessing someones credit risk, possibility of setting up collateral and a legal way of recovering your funds in case of credit default.

Unless, of course, de fi wants to be used mainly for money laundering ;)

Not everything needs to run on the blockchain.

If you are getting a mortgage, there needs to be a trust. It is not an easy feat to get 400-600k lent out. The way I see lending protocols is, the interest and costs that they are taking is more worthit to them than just taking a loan from the bank.

Also mostly right now people who are using defi applications for lending and borrowing purposes use it to buy more bitcoin/altcoins. No one uses it to actually buy real life items.

Emission rewards formula:
 $300,000,000 \cdot (\text{Your stake} / \text{Total stake})$

If I have 25000 XRD means I can get 7500 XRD yearly $300,000,000 \cdot (25,000 / 1,000,000,000) = 7500 \text{ XRD (30\% APY)}$

Not bad, I'm going to buy more now while still low price.

Thanks for the info! I was privately speculating about the return rate and used 1b as the potential supply which gave 30% - should've posted my speculation publicly ?.

But anyway yeah so the advantage here is to get your staking setup immediately. 300m are released yearly regardless of how much is being staked, so for that first year we can nab 30% assuming there are 1b staked. Then after that first year assume all 300m of the new XRD are being staked, then the second year would return  $300\text{m} / 1.3\text{b} = \sim 23\%$ . As the amount staking grows the APY will decrease, so don't dilly-dally on this!

Also this is assuming all 1b XRD are being staked. Imagine if for whatever reason only half of the supply was being staked, then that first year would return 60%!

ashish2112 - June 10, 2021, 12:24 pm

APY would be around 18-22% because RTJL will be staking 25% of whatever the community will be staking

But 20% is also good return keeping in mind that price will go up as well

Interesting, I haven't finished reading the source yet. Still its best to get staking started ASAP as APY should decrease as supply increases.

You have to convert eXRD to XRD and keep them in radix desktop wallet.

There's no risk of loosing as your XRD won't be sent to node operator they will be locked in your wallet though you might loose stake reward if you stake with not so good owner

Here's a quick breakdown of some of the many reasons why I believe this project is something really special.

Layer 1 Dapp platform built to support DeFi

Marketcap is tiny compared to competitors

New type of DLT structurem parallises transactions

Scales linearly without bottlenecks

8 years of R&D went into the project

Solves the trilemma

The only sharded layer 1 with atomic composability

Prevents smart contract Hacks and exploits

Very dev friendly platform
Component catalogue for easy app building
Lifetime royalties for devs who build components
World class team with members from ycombinator consensys and microsoft

Not only is the technology good the roadmap is very busy this year, here are some events in the near future.

Cassandra testnet V1 Q1
Olympia Betanet Q2
Olympia Mainnet and wallet Q2
Cassandra testnet V2
Alexandra Mainnet
More CEX listings likely

There is so much more to say about this project but I'd suggest reading the some of the articles on their site, reading the whitepapers or going to the telegram and discord groups if you want a more in depth understanding.

I realize the chart doesn't compare Radix with Cardano, anyone has a comparison?

Cardano - Scale on layer 2 and break atomic composability.

Solana - Validator hardware requirement getting higher every year. More to centralized Zilliqa - Sharded but cross shard transaction not allow. Break atomic composability.

This is why Radix far more superior than other project.

I guess some people here (including me) are simply being patient with the price and not too fixated on short-term gains. They'd rather look at the big picture because most likely things will really start to kick off when the full infrastructure is there, tons of dApps are being built and the userbase grows. Of course, it'd be awesome to see Radix already 10x this year, but I'd rather just follow the project patiently and manage my expectations. It's kind of cool because you rarely stumble upon a project of this magnitude - I can just follow the progress with glee and know it'll be a colossus in a few years.

I wouldn't sell my Radix if it doubled. I wouldn't sell it if it hit $1. I don't see anyone really saying Radix will take 5 years to double. What many are saying is that it's going to take 5 years for this project to be full-steam in value. That value could be $1, $10 or even more. The project is huge and has been in development for many years already. If you invest into Radix and doubling up makes you happy then by all means, sell. I'm personally waiting for Radix to make me into a millionaire before I sell. A $3-$5 XRD should do it.

We don't know if by being on Mainnet with a native token will mean it's on more exchanges. Waiting for the purchase to be easier is probably the same mentality a lot of people on the sideline have which could mean a rise in price as mainnet occurs. "I'll wait till it's easy to buy" might be what 1000 other people think who may drive the price up. By all means, wait.

Quote: This is Radix we're talking about here, not some random shitcoin.

And that's fine but also said by every investor with certainty their investment wasn't into a shitcoin. btw, it's a crowded field. You don't even have to be a shitcoin to be replaced by a better technology. Crypto investors are fickle. What is hot today could be cold tomorrow.

More 90%+ drops btw...so easy to find these....

This is Radix we're talking about here, not some random shitcoin. Let's stay a bit realistic here.

Go to <https://cryptorank.io/ath> and sort by percent lost from ATH for 1300 examples. Just because Radix isn't a shitcoin doesn't mean it's immune to this - especially if the entire market drops drastically like it did from ATH in 2017. This is absolutely a possibility.

Calling an investment "automatically risk-free" and claiming others are being unrealistic is quite an impressive contradiction to make.

Invalid examples. Those highs are from 2018, that's like 3 years ago... Steve and Voxi were talking about a 90% crash in the blink of an eye/in a day.

You're being argumentative about this.

I don't see where they literally say in a day they crash 90%. And markets drop in different ways. Could be a slow steady decline or fast quick drops. Does it even matter if your investment loses 90% in a day or 6 months? I'll say it DOES NOT MATTER. So if it makes you feel happy then I'll say it for you. Crypto doesn't drop 90% in a day. Now what?

You're latching onto the timeline to distract from the original point. I can be more clear and say 6 months if you want. Your quote is the following:

Quote:But if it hits $1 then you're automatically risk-free because it wouldn't go back below $0.10 or whatever price point you bought at.

Which is it? Is the investment automatically risk-free because it wouldn't go back below $0.10 or can any coin or asset crash down 90% over a longer period obviously? Those statements are irreconcilable.

I wouldn't consider 6 months a long period of time, we're talking about holding Radix for 3-5 years.

Omniscient - June 13, 2021, 3:14 pm

Back to that 90% drop thing. I can't think of any crypto that has crashed 90% but has recovered to the high again. And the problem is that a falling crypto you just don't know the bottom. It could drop 20% in a month but you have confidence it goes back, but then next month another 20% and you just hold. Next thing you know it's down 90% and it's too late to sell. At that point you may as well hold it.

But if you have a price point to sell, take out your initial investment, then even if the asset loses a great deal of value you just don't really care.

This isn't just an investment strategy. It's a very good one. It prevents loss of principle.

Radix for me is a long term hold, I have a large investment. But the moment it's $1 and I can sell only 10-20% of my holding to recoup 100% of my investment I will most certainly do so.

HF could set up multiple validators like

Hackforums 1, Hackforums 2, Hackforums 3... Hackforums 100 then have hackforums community delegate (Stake) to those validators. Validators get rewarded for block production in which they give a share to their Voters (Supporters who delegated their stake). Validators would obviously be the most profitable, seconded by their Voters. Why would you vote for Hackforum validators? Could be a few reasons. One you know Hackforums is a big supporter, able to maintain the validators properly, and probably increase your APR by giving more % back to their voters.

Drawback? Centralization if HF controls the majority of the validators.

Totally hype and excited for a Radix HF validator if that becomes a thing!

Slowly trying to keep buying more and more radix as time goes on all because HF / Frequency and Omni have been so forward with the whitepages and good things about it.

Of course, everyone should read and find things out themselves to make an opinion but HF and Omni were able to at least point me in that direction so am grateful for that and the possible future.

Lets do this! I may have passed up on the past huge gains of crypto being in the space the whole time but not being serious about it and the future but now I am and seems lots of others in this project are feeling the same way.

Thankful for this thread, I have been reading you for a long time and I am very excited about radix, it seems to me that it is an incredible project with a great future, everything I read makes me more excited, but before entering here I did not even know about the existence of Radix.

If the majority of cryptography is not going to shit because of governments, laws or something like that, I think that in the long run Radix has a lot of potential and will bring us a lot of money.

I currently own about 20k of eXRD but would like to buy more before mainnet.

You can now test stake your fake eXRD tokens on the betanet wallet. They've made this so easy to do that anyone new to crypto could do it with ease. Can't wait for the mainnet release.

Random thought - would be great if we could add 2FA to the Radix desktop wallets instead of just our 4 digit code and password.

Best option is to be patient and just wait till actual swap can occur. You have another 2 weeks before it can be done. Easier to have a tutorial when it's possible.

Understand that you don't have any time-frame requirement to swap to XRD. You can hold that eXRD for a very long time just fine.

Exactly. There's no real hurry as with Radix, it will be 1:1 swappable from eXRD to XRD and vice versa for the foreseeable future.

Total supply is 24b which would put us at $240b marketcap, but that includes 300m/year over 40 years for staking rewards. So if you only count the other 12b plus say 1.5b of staking rewards over 5 years we're talking 13.5b supply -> $135b marketcap.

Good numbers and the overall market cap of the market is going to 10x within 2-3 years. So a $135b cap is likely going to be somewhere in top 25 which imho is where Radix eventually will be.

I feel like it's very realistic that we achieve these numbers within 5 years just as long as the Radix team does their job. Our job is to continue to support the project with investments and awareness. The reason to spread awareness is not to tell people they can get rich. But to highlight the technological leap that Radix is attempting to undertake. We must explain to people how Radix DLT is the superior technology. Lucky for us the Radix website actually does a fairly good job of explaining it.

Personally I love the dAPP rewards that Radix offers. First I've seen that incentivized in that way.

I just get all excited about this project. Not since Ethereum have I been so amped up about the future.

I can't speak to what will happen with price swings, but yes economically speaking as more coins are released the harder it will be to increase the price. The price unlocks stop at $.43 though so once we get past that the only supply increase we'll need to deal with is staking emissions (which will go to us stakers anyway).

Here's the actual price unlocking schedule for eXRD. XRD also follows this schedule with the same price milestones and % of its supply released at each milestone.

What do you think about this type of tokenomics? I like the fact that it basically proves how much faith they have in their project by basically saying they think 0.xx$ price is too low to sell such a high supply at so they keep a certain amount locked. But besides this, is there any reason or benefit to this type of tokenomics? Usually you see crypto tokens doing the opposite, by burning supply and marketing the deflationary aspect of their token, to increase the value of the tokens because of the decreasing supply.

Just seen this on TG as to why it is better to evenly distribute your staking across a few nodes as opposed to one node which minimizes the possibility of attack and makes the network as resilient as possible in the case of accidental validator node failures.

Quote:Mainly it is a guideline to distribute stake evenly across many nodes.

The core rule is simply:

Try to stake in a way that your staking leads to a more evenly distributed network stake overall => stake on nodes which do not have much stake yet.

The extension to this is, that it is better to not put all eggs in one basket and stake on a multiple validators (e.g. 3-5) => in case of one node has a downtime for whatever reason, you only lose 20 - 33% of your rewards for this epoch ? (each epoch takes 1-2 hours).

I can recommend the Radix guide here

So, there are some news which I am not happy about at all.

Early investors still have locked tokens (currently 70% of all supply) and are unhappy because they are locked and they can't stake them, so they are discussing to unlock them for staking only or stake for them, not sure how exactly yet.

I think this is unfair, they knew how it's gonna be when they invested, when and how their tokens are unlocked. This will impact APY heavily as well.

If this happens, there will be 4.4b tokens available to stake. Assuming everything is staked it's gonna be  $300.000(\text{yourAmount}/4.400.000.000)$ . That puts us at 6.8% instead of 30% - 25% fee, which would be roughly 5%.

Where did you read it?

If this didn't come from Radix team I would not worry about that.

I'm pretty sure you can't create a subset of "stake only" tokens so the only solution would be Radix team keeping all the tokens, that would potentially be unlocked before target price level, and staking them on behalf of the owners.

Nothing's going to change in tokenomics in the near future, unless general public goes "unlock them all, get rid of weak hands!". If something changes later it's not going to be "they're unlocked now get rekt" - instead you should expect public vote, most likely not based on token amount possessed by individual.

And especially nothing is going to change around mainnet release. Like come on. I know some people want to buy exrd cheaper, but there are some levels of fud that even I facepalm at.

Public vote, sure why not, but IF for some reason, they unlock them without public voting for it (most likely won't happen) it's going to be stupid.

When mainnet drops are our coins automatically converted in Bitfinex? Would the conversion happen fairly fast or take a could of days/weeks? I wanted to pull my Radix out but I don't want to have to deal with withdrawal and deposit fees to covert my Radix or some KYC system they have in place someone mentioned. Also, can I put my Radix on my ledger nano S before and after mainnet release? Thanks guys

Seems you are least bothered by the main-net delay. Happy to see that, it's more important they deliver with a working product even if they take couple months more, also radix is at least 25% up in last one month. After I saw your sell post, I traded a lot of my ETH into eXRD and I haven't regretted for a single moment, would have lost much more dollar value in ETH

I have 6k eXRD-tokens. I have fiat money that I am willing to lose. I think 10k eXRD-tokens have a nice ring to it, so I want that amount pretty soon. Do you think I should buy about 4k tokens now, or can I buy them in a month? It's a stupid question maybe, but I don't really understand the implications all the latest news will have and what happens at the end of July. Do you think we will see a dramatic increase in price? If so, then I need to buy quick. If not, then I think I save my fiat and keep lurking. I am also highly interested in staking my eXRD. Staking is not yet available right?

No one knows if it's going to go up, down or fucking sideways. So buy when you want, I usually work out my average entry and buy below it so make my average entry lower.

When I started learning about crypto, I told myself I'd do 40% across ALL crypto. Then I learned about this project and realized the potential... It's hard to not dump more into something you're already invested in, especially if it's something like this where we've all grown to be passionate about it. But in all honesty, you don't need to spend a lot of money to make a lot of money with a project like this. $10k at the current price would be just over $800k if it reaches $10. I think you have plenty, but that's me lol

Whereabouts are you holding your eXRD?

I've currently got mine on an exchange but I HATE holding it there.
Are you holding it in cold storage (might not be good for the long term if staking is introduced), or something like trust wallet? What would you recommend?

You can hold it on Trust or MetaMask. I believe Radix is implementing Ledger support so you can stake on it as well.

Quote:To hold, transact, and stake XRD tokens, we believe users need a reliable wallet solution. The Radix Desktop Wallet (as tested on betanet) is included in the Olympia release as one wallet solution to conveniently store XRD and stake them in a few clicks.

However, we understand that many users prefer using a hardware wallet as an additional measure of security, which is why we have been committed to providing Ledger hardware wallet support within the Radix Desktop Wallet. While primary Ledger integration was completed some time ago, recent changes needed for the Desktop Wallet connection have delayed completion.

The core integration is working and will be soon submitted for Ledger HQ for inclusion in their Manager for easy install. However this is too last-minute for our comfort, and the review process often can be lengthy, and so we are not confident that it will be available and fully tested before the bootstrapping epoch ends.

Without hardware wallet support, this would leave many XRD token holders who are more comfortable relying on a hardware wallet unfairly not able to immediately participate in staking for network security and receiving emissions.

Radix seems to be inline with the rest of the market. You will always have profit takers and players that make big moves on a whim.

There is thousands of coin, and every new coin is creating every day. Why you people trust and focus on radix that much. There are already lot of good coins with real-life usage like cardano, algo, polkadot, eth etc.

You don't think those coin have more bright future than radix?

Please correct me if I am missing a big picture

To summarize. Radix is technically better than every blockchain you mentioned. Maybe spend a minute reading their own website.

Highlights...

1. Can do 1.4m TPS.
2. Pays rewards for dApps and code.
3. Scales to infinity without breaking composability.
4. A layer 1 solution.

Radix will backbone a $100T market without a problem. There is no other blockchain that can do that. They all face problems with scale and speed and require layer 2 solutions.

But of course that's if they deliver on their technology. Radix is within weeks of going Mainnet. That's when things will start to get interesting.

Radix is going to be the only technology needed for DeFi.

Like any project they may be slow to go to market and a competitor can eat up market share. Seems like the dev and the company is in it for the long run so I am not scared of them running away. Also it doesn't seem like they are in it for the money.

Radix does seem to good to be true, but we will see when theres a dapp on the platform.

The team not delivering is the biggest risk imho. Otherwise I don't see how this project can fail since it's so far advanced from other solutions. Radix is what DeFi needs. Fixing the bottleneck problems and scalability on layer 1 is huge. Imagine saying that Bitcoin can do smart contracts, scale to infinity, and fee will be a penny, and near instant confirmations. Sounds awesome doesn't it? Yeah, that's because it is awesome and it's called Radix.

Doubt it. People bought it or will buy in next days to stake not sell. Radix holders know that they will get the highest APY in the start, later on not that much. That's my opinion.

Assuming they do everything they promise (around 3 more years), this will be THE COIN.
The numbers.. insane.. no coin comes close to it for scaling, then there is security and all that Radix has..

Thank you OP for raising awareness and all others doing research and posting stuff in this thread.
We are lucky that we got informed about Radix so early for such a cheap price..

However, if you are here for anything less than 3 years (most likely 4-5+), don't expect much.

Edit: also I saw few people asking for Radix purchasable reward, I'd really like to see that as well

As I predicted, we'll most likely see pump in next 2-3 weeks to get at least 2 unlocks (that would be .21 7day moving average) so those who invested early get 5% coins unlocked at each unlock meaning they can stake it.

I may be wrong, but if I was them, I would definitely do that, that's a lot of money for them if they stake early on.

That happens in pump and dumps or short-term gain projects. Radix is not that. With staking it's more likely we will see an explosion in value as many work to obtain native XRD. I can easily see pricing levels hit .25-.30 for the week after launch. IMHO that's still not a sell price. I want to hold till $1 then I would sell only enough to recoup my initial investment then hold the rest till $10 (or bust). But I may sell my rewards I earn on a continued basis to ensure minimal losses in case of crash and to pay for server costs.

Anyways, we are not gonna dump because of launch.

Your experience is obviously far greater than mine, I also wouldn't want it to dump, but I have seen with major announcements/news project always pump followed by a dump later on regardless whether they are a pump/dump or not. Hopefully you are right and majority of radix holders are Diamond hands! I am personally not selling ever if they stick to their fundamentals to be honest and continue growing. I however do plan to sell my yearly staking rewards once it hits $1.

We get 1 xrd for free do you want to round up as MANY people as possible and all pool up 100 xrd? then stake it? otherwise we need to wait till august 5th! Fuserleer get these validators a bonus 100 xrd.

fuserleer - July 28, 2021, 3:13 pm

Doesn't matter, there is a grace period (first epoch) to give people that want to run validators time to get things set up, receive stake etc before the first selection event.

Unfortunately the ramps to obtain, swap xrd aren't ready but we didn't want to postpone again. A pain but comes with 3rd party infrastructure dependencies and being somewhat under the radar.

Instabridge is live on the 5th so you can swap exrd to xrd

Other 3rd party swap facilities are in the works and will be available around the same time, if not sooner

Also it's working fine their Radix Desktop app as well!

I think you are little mistaken SIM, The first epoch is already running and it ends on 11th August.
You only have around 6 days from tomorrow if you do not want to miss the second epoch rewards.

If you want to stake it, then yes.

You can either wait for gate exchange to offer exrd->xrd or move to Metamask, do KYC on Instapass and use Instabridge to swap exrd->xrd (available tomorrow).

Bitfinex hasn't announced when they will enable the swapping process. Staking rewards will only start on Aug 11th.

If you want to use instapass/instabridge to swap, it will be live tomorrow but you can start by adding your eth/xrd addresses today.

Sold all my radix, made a few grand profit and that's fine, profit is profit.

I know yall HF members are somewhat radix lovers here but I just don't get the hype.

Reasons:

1. What I read about Dan reminds me too much of myself, and I wouldn't trust me.

2. Website is promoting Ren, AAVE and other established protocols as if they were the part of the Radix ecosystem. Well are they really?

3. By the looks of it there's gonna be MASSIVE inflation in the price range $0.10-$0.43

The fact that it even says

Quote: IF THE TOKEN UNLOCKING MILESTONES ARE NOT REACHED SOME TOKENS MAY REMAIN INDEFINITELY LOCKED.

doesn't sound too convincing either, like wtf do developers not expect their token to at least x3 in next 3 years? (Their roadmap is already booked for 3 years+...)

4. Why CMC says there's 730M circulating, if $0.11 was definitely achieved?

I know yall are bullish on Radix but it kinda reminds me how everyone here was bullish on ARK in 2017 (use search to verify the amount of threads about it here), and now it's kinda dead.

If that doesn't sound like 2017 ICOs idk what does.

Why didn't Uniswap or dozens of other legit project need a token presale to achieve decentralization?

Why did other projects find a way for decentralization releasing token AFTER releasing the product?

Why do they need to collect those millions of dollars from yall?

What kind of unlocking mechanism is that tied to token's price...

If decentralization was what they were after why not just airdrop to eth addresses or reward testnet/first participants or a gazillion other methods...

1. Uniswap doesn't have a mainnet. It's built on and runs on the Ethereum blockchain. Whereas Radix runs on its own mainnet, Olympia.

2. Unlike Uniswap Radix (XRD) isn't a token (anymore, eXRD was a token) it's a coin built on their own independent blockchain network, Olympia.

They are giving us the opportunity to get on the boat early on, plus this allows them some funds that will contribute towards the development and marketing of the project. If you don't believe, don't invest, no one is forcing you to and no one cares. But a lot of people do their due diligence and the team behind it is just very solid.

As for unlocking circulating supply, it simply means about half the tokens that could be sold are being HODLed because the owners believe that the current prices are too low to sell since they expect that in 5-10 years it will be worth considerably more.

Too add on to other peoples statements. Uniswap initially had no token. it had no intentions of making a token. And UNISWAP TOKEN DOES NOTHING VCS LITERALLY CONTROL IT. UNISWAP.APP itself is not decentralized(how they excluded Delta products and synthetic products from their app, but the protocol is permissionless and decentralized).

Sushi (a competitor) forced them to get a token because Sushi was an actual threat to their market share.

Also as other stated Radix is a utility token and will be used as part of the ecosystem.

Edit: Sorry Uniswap may or may not have some function, but the general premise stays the same :)

The max supply (24b) is only reached after 40 years and there is 300m set aside for emission (staking rewards) subsequently you can keep up with "inflation" by staking. It won't ever reach 24b because of fees being burnt and a lot of things can happen throughout 40 years.

Also as all transactions fees are burnt and as more adoption = more TPS = more TX fees being burnt.

Quote:selling you a worthless erc-20 token that takes 5 minutes to create with promises that after the product is released it will do something.

Because the ERC-20 token is not the same as the native XRD. The ERC-20 was simply a holder token for early investment. I shouldn't even have to tell you that.

Quote:Why didn't Uniswap or dozens of other legit project need a token presale to achieve decentralization?

There has been other projects that do swaps and used ERC-20's as investment level release. It's actually a useful purpose of Ethereum Network.

Quote:Why do they need to collect those millions of dollars from yall?

Wow, you're the hit-parade of silly questions that are self-evident. Funding is required to develop. Completely normal. The Radix team continues to grow with hiring of talent. You can't do that with promises.

Quote:Idk I'm skeptical, way too many redflags for me, but if you are convinced otherwise it's fine, not trying to fud really.

Well that's fine being a skeptic. And basically the success of Radix imho rides on how well the team can deliver on their roadmap. Oddly enough you mention that they have the next 3 years booked. I consider that the reason I am investing into Radix. They have a long-term plan and the project has been built from the ground up. This is not borrowed code with a few changes from a Git source.

Quote: If decentralization was what they were after why not just airdrop to eth addresses or reward testnet/first participants or a gazillion other methods...

What's with this idea they are after decentralization? I think you misunderstand their long term goals. And if you don't understand their goal, let me enlighten you. To get projects like Uniswap and Sushi to switch to Radix. They would do so because Radix is faster and cheaper and more secure. Because Radix is building KYC/AML ramps which some DeFi may want to incorporate but still maintain their own autonomy and not worry about paperwork. There is shit Radix can do that's imho mind-blowing and why I am absolutely a believer. In my gut, I believe Radix is Crypto v3. It's the next level. It's Google, Facebook, and Apple 20 years ago.

Literally all world markets like NYSE and Nasdaq could theoretically all run on Radix in a few years. This can't be said of any other blockchain. It doesn't have the ability to do enough TPS or cheap enough either. I get all riled up just thinking about Radix could do.

Well that's the gambling aspect of early investing. There are promises and you are putting a lot of trust into the development team. I think though if you looked at Radix and what the team is trying to do is impressive not just because of their mission goals but also in the way they do it. Dan (founder) actually does live stream coding of Radix. Him and all the team are public and imho transparent so that's a +1. I can't think of a single successful project that has an anonymous team.

At first my own investment was $500. But as I looked deeper I went deeper. Now it's a huge portion of my portfolio. That's mainly because of the confidence I have in this project. Yeah, it could go bad and I'd take a financial hit from it. But I see a lot of projects that are shit doing really well. I just don't see how this quality project can fail beyond the team itself just giving up.

Have to say I'm really disappointed in the fact that were going to miss the staking rewards for who knows how long unless we do KYC.

The fact that Bitfinex haven't even released an ETA is disappointing. We could be waiting for weeks still until it becomes a possibility for the majority of holders.

To those who have done KYC, enjoy your crazy returns at the start until the masses can finally convert and stake.

My guess is that Bitfinex won't do the swap until tier 3-4 AML is running through instapass if that's how they're going to swap it for their customers. It's just a guess though, I'm probably wrong.

Bitfinex swap could range from literally 2 days to couple months, I guess it depends on how much the team pushes for it (open up their wallets to bitfinex).

Friction in today's financial system costs the world 0.05% of global GDP (approximately $71Bn per annum), and delivers financial products and services that are often inflexible and benefit primarily those at the top of the food chain. Radix believes this is the most important problem that the right permissionless DLT network can solve.

DEFI as a whole represents about $4b of this ecosystem.

This is taken right from the whitepage, I was trying to understand Radix's real world application, do I have it correct that DEFI is attempting to tackle the $71B problem mentioned above and then RADIX is trying to target parts of what DEFI is doing wrong? I could be EXTREMELY wrong but if this is the case, this seems like this is attempting to address a very niche portion of the financial services market. The price action going all the way to back 2020 has been very boring/uninspiring when I looked at the charts so I'm just curious.

If I asked a RADIX bull why to invest $5,000 in RADIX, what would his response be in a few sentences? In my view if something cannot be explained in that amount of explanation, it's likely to complicated to go mainstream.

$71Bn per annum ok.

DEFI as a whole $4b ok.

I'm believing you about these numbers.

But, $4b DEFI is right now, later, A LOT more. That is if you believe crypto will be THE currency all over the world and used everywhere.

If this happens (can take even 20+ years or maybe never), then this is not a very niche thing, they are doing it now for the future.

Overall, Radix will provide unlimited scalability, easy and secure development and other neat things along with it.

But I do agree, the things Radix will provide, would really have an edge when we will need that much of power that Radix has/will have imo.

$4b is almost surely not the correct value of current DeFi. And it's almost surely not the future cap of DeFi which if you believe in crypto being the future, then you should believe that markets like NYSE and Nasdaq can be DeFi one day on blockchain technology just like Radix. Radix has already targeted the trillion dollar market as their end goal.

You want a brief response in a few sentences, I think that's the best I can do.

Not unless you do KYC through Instapass. Keep in mind I submitted all documents over 3 days ago now and it's still "processing".

That's because exchanges love ripping off users. It's like $7-10 right now and half of that earlier in the day. You need to remember exchanges profit off withdrawals and keeping your coins with them. Bitfinex is a shit-tier exchange anyways use kucoin, Bitfinex charges deposit fees for crypto (did at least idk now), which in itself labels it a shit-tier exchange.

BagOBuns - August 16, 2021, 3:25 am

Lots of yes votes I see. This can be either good or bad, kind risky here.

I wish price would skyrocket soon to full unlock to avoid this.

It won't be fair either way and it could end very bad for Radixdlt imo.

(Aug 16, 2021 02:26 PM)Omniscient Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Explain more about the "price vesting system". Are you talking about the way XRD gets released at pricing levels?

Yes. There's A LOT of talk in Telegram about this, I'd say more than 80% of all messages in past few days. I'm talking about unofficial trader group.

The problem is that unlock will happen much later than originally planned, so OGs want early unlock to stake/sell (most of big investors want to stake it).

There have been multiple suggestions.

1. Make early unlock available, but burn x% of it as a penalty (30-35%).

This option is quite bad imo, because the only investors that will do this is to sell tokens immediately, which makes nothing good for XRD.

People who plan to stake it and are in the long game won't unlock early since it makes no sense.

2. Halve price vesting targets

3. Unlock it all immediately and whatever happens happens (multiple people gave examples of cases like Radix, they did full unlock and coin actually pumped hard after that) technically they can't do this -that's not how they planned the release-mechanism

They only thing they can do is to fully unlock the radix which I don't think they will do it sooner or later

Currently, there is discussion about changing the current price vesting system. EXRD and XRD both I think.

Alot of people believe that the price vesting system is a bottleneck.

The Claims are Valid as mainnet wasn't what we all expected.

There is a ton of people that aren't learning Radix because of the pricevesting system. I feel like a change is necessary if we want people to learn about Radix and possibly invest in it.

I believe James even said somewhere that Pier was expected most of the tokens to be unlocked by now, but we are still 65% away from that.

https://t.me/Radix\_TRADER/130753

https://t.me/Radix\_TRADER/131206

Even with Radix's superiority in tech wise. I just don't understand what is holding it back from achieving the price unlocks even with something as big as Mainnet launch. The conclusion that I came up with is because of the price vesting system. People don't want to learn about radix or invest in it due to the fact that it is not the best investment. If you go through each countries telegram you notice a pattern that tokenomics is always holding people back from entering the ecosystem.

I know this has been addressed over and over again, but a ton of people in the trading channel agree that they were expecting Mainnet to atleast pump it to 20-30c so that it can unlock some tokens and achieve a higher marketcap.

Search James - Radbull in the trader telegram and you can see the claims.

We have to keep an open mind.

The amount of xrd in circulation is nothing compared to the amount in total supply. Its kind of insane. Its like 24 Billion total which is a lot.

This is coming from someone with 300k+ XRD Staked if that matters. I am okay with a negative drawdown if it will help the future of Radix Succeed.

Price Vesting System is the token release system for seed/genesis investors that Radix uses to gradually release tokens that were purchased in return for funds.

James states that the only reason that there is a price vesting system is because VCs required Radix to implement it inorder to get funding. But the VCS didn't even end up showing up when it was time to invest.

This video was created before Pier knew how much of a barrier the current release system is. He thought that there will be enough hype to overcome the blockade. I have to find the message, but it was mentioned somewhere by a staff in the trader channel

One of the main reason this problem is coming back to light is because the Radix Team and OGs of Radix are realizing that it may be a problem that should be addressed.

The people that brought it up is the people that was originally pro-vesting, but is now changing their mind as its turning into a negative aspect of Radix.

Quotes are from James ~ Radbull - Admin Asia

Quote:f we change vesting and price rises, that facilitates Radix's success as it draws more attention to the project, enriches the Foundation to provide additional funding for marketing and development(wallets/better UX), and attracts FOMO. Price rise even attracts more developers(!!) Devs didn't start building en masse on DOT and Solana until they pumped and people heard about it.

If the price falls, you can buy more cheaply and increase your staking rewards, making even greater gains ultimately.

That's why I believe an antifragile investment strategy wins bigger whatever happens if we change the vesting. A free market is just better than one with price controls if you are on top of your game.

Quote: The tokens are currently locked according to price thresholds rather than time. Unfortunately, that means every time price goes up a bit, the supply inflates. Kind of like a stablecoin.

Quote: You want the real scoop? A bunch of VCs told Piers they would only invest if we were all price vested, then they pulled out anyway

So it wasn't even Radix's idea

Piers went along with it bc he thought demand would be so high we would pump past all the unlocks easily

If you don't believe me ask the team LOL

Blind is one of the biggest shillers of Radix. Can see him all over reddit and telegram.

Quote from Allen Simon

Quote: Consider cardano. They have been mooning for over a year, based solely on the promise that they have good tech and will have smart contracts soon. From a high level perspective that sounds just like our pitch. There must be a reason why our price has not also mooned. So what, if anything, can we change to attract many new buyers. I have not heard anyone object to this goal. I have seen two credible explanations.

1) Its just too hard to buy XRD. However, some aspects of this will be solved within the month. Many (unfortunately not US) people will soon be able to buy XRD on Bitfinex (and I would expect soon also stake it) on Aug 23. But that does not seem to be the heart of the problem.

Seeing prices rise is the best marketing possible. We need a high volume of trading of XRD, in order to generate enthusiasm for Radix. Without a high volume of trading we cannot convince larger CEXs to also support XRD. So far neither gate.io nor kucoin has been willing to make the same kind of commitment that Bitfinex has. They are IMHO waiting to see how successful Bitfinex has been at ACTUALLY making money before they commit. It's your classic chicken-egg problem. We cannot get commitments from CEXs without demonstrable high trading volume, and we won't get high trading volume until we have more CEXs supporting XRD.

2) Several people who I believe have the best interests of Radix at heart, have presented a lot of anecdotal evidence that the main reason people who have heard of Radix refuse to buy is our price-vesting schedule. I take them at their word. This is not a small number of people. For reasons I cannot pretend to understand both Chinese and Russians have this attitude. IMHO the risk that this could permanently cripple Radix, even after we have Xi'an, is large especially if a reasonable solution that is acceptable to most people can be found.

The obvious solution is to get rid of vesting. That to me is not a reasonable solution because it is too abrupt and would have multiple unintended consequences. A better approach would be some sort of accelerated removal of vesting. My proposal at https://t.me/Radix\_TRADER/131206 is such a proposal. It is a minor sounding change to the existing vesting schedule, that is targeted at complete unlock near the release of Babylon.

There are a few constituencies that are adversely affected by my proposal. There are people advocating to keep the price low, so that they can use DCA to increase their bags. There is another group that does not like unlocking the tokens any quicker, because that is more money that will probably go towards staking. And the more XRD is staked, the lower the APY from staking. IMHO these concerns are not as bad as they fear, and that with the existing very low supply of eXRD, the increase in price will more than make up for their concerns.

My recommendation is for the team to publish a Radix blog making two main points:

a) The original purpose of price vesting was to guarantee that the stake for Olympia was widely disbursed, and not concentrated in only the original investors. This goal has been achieved. So now it is time too adjust the vesting schedule to meet the future needs of the project.

b) The proposed change is to modify the existing price-vesting algorithm so that it shares some of the aspects of time based vesting. In particular there will be a date certain in the near future at which all locked tokens will have been unlocked. It is also done so that there is no immediate impact on current investors, so that they have time to adjust their plans accordingly. Finally it is done in a way that is relatively simple to understand and explain.

Also I have no issue with price vesting now it seems ok. Just the sheer amount of xrd that will be release in general is alot.

Out of 24 Bn, 12 Bn will be be released as network emission over ~40 years, and 2.4 Bn is locked for StableCoin project in future. So we are looking close to ~10 Bn. Radix Economic paper lays this out pretty well.

Yup true, so if price vesting schedule gets removed, then I don't think current price per coin will hold up. I won't be voting for this proposal.

Time is a major factor in crypto as people believe in market cycles.

What is the reason for keeping the vesting system when it has already done its job and is more than a negative then a positive aspect.

Just wondering do you not notice how Radix hasnt hit mainstream even with the fundamentals? Pier and the team did so much marketing and it didnt even have that much effect. So it has to mean something is blocking it.

How does it have more negative than positive aspect?

All I can see is that if unlock happens, few people will dump it as they stated in unofficial Radix TRADER Telegram group and other whales will stake it.

So for regular, smaller investors, how is that good? APY most likely instantly cut by half at least and price drop due to few whales planning to sell.

What does community get from that?

Lower price is only good if you are stocking up

Much lower APY is worse for everyone, only OG whales will get same amount of XRD due to lower APY but more tokens, everyone else gets fucked.

They did lots of marketing? Where? They do have nice amount of AMAs, but apart from that, no real marketing imo compared to others.

And why do you think price would suddenly skyrocket after mainnet?
I thought it would a bit (OG whales pumping for unlocks), but it didn't happen. Apart from unlock reason, APY is the only reason why price would pump.
Besides that, Radix has almost nothing to show at this stage.

IF price is like this after smart contracts and Scrypto, I MAY be convinced about changes, before that, braindead, no reason at all imo.

If they change something in the near future (1-2 months) either full unlock or something favorable for whales, I'll be very disappointed.

Edit:

Also my opinion why price isn't pumping that much.

1. Apart from nice APY, XRD is currently meh
2. Pain in the ass get XRD, $100,000 swap max only max tier KYC

I think we'll see nice price after XRD listings and swap services on multiple bigger exchanges, I'm almost sure about that.

Also after smart contracts and Scrypto documentation, price will start to rally.

To answer this, it is already on a big exchange (kucoin). It won't be on binance until there is more volume and more interest. The whole point of changing the price vesting is to get more interest in the product and help people participate.

Additionally, your thoughts on why price isn't pumping is valid, but it isn't the only reason. Price wasn't pumping even before Mainnet.

Also you said Quote:Also after smart contracts and Scrypto documentation, price will start to rally.

This is the assumption, but if theres no demand developers will be more inclined to build on somewhere where there is demand even when our tech is more superior.

1. They all talk about proof blah blah, tbh apart from this insane week in unofficial group about price vesting, I rarely saw people complain about that or not wanting to invest in because of that, why would new investors care that much? I will do some more research on this specific thing and will post results, will even do a vote and surveys in few places, hope I can debunk this, because if I'm correct, unlocking will only favor initial investors.

2. I am not scared of short term volatility. I don't trade, just hold, I don't care if we get to .05 before $.2 tbh, I'm staking it and plan on doing it for years before anything (unless they do something stupid, then I'll just cash out and say bye).

How long will be the dip you say, that people are ready to buy the dip. At current price ($.15), $110m worth of XRD will be unlocked. Most of that most likely staked, at least halving the APY, probably even worse. If the other part wants to be sold, it won't be at once, because of liquidity, but we will see sell, sell, sell every single day for probably months or even longer before they sell everything they want, NOW THAT is what can really hold the price or even crash it imo.

3. XRD is not on any exchange. eXRD is on multiple ones, I know. However, current way to get XRD is frustrating and stupid, very annoying as well, I did it just because I don't want to miss any staking rewards. Imagine someone wants to invest more than $100k. THEY CANT due to Radix not even enabling more than that. $100k is peanut money for investors, so why bother doing anything with XRD if they can't even invest properly or buy $100k worth without moving price for 20% due to liquidity?

4. Price pumping. Any price pumping prior or irrelevant to smart contracts, Scrypto, Xi'an is just normal price movement. Without Xi'an, Radix is nothing.

This is the reason I believe, now is the time to stake and wait for Radix team to do what they need to and we'll be happy ~2025 most likely.

But if it turns out and price vesting isn't that big of a deal to MAJORITY of people who want to invest in Radix, then unlocking coins is only in favor of whales.

That's just my opinion.

Will come back with proof of surveys/polls about price vesting in few days so we can see if that is really the problem.

Yes, it will favor the seed/genesis investors. But it will also help us in the long run. I don't think you should dismiss the group as the admins in the unofficial group is also community mods in the official one.

The people that are trying to get this changed is the people that are hard-on the price vesting initially, but changed their mind as it was obvious that it was a problem.

Shouldn't dismiss this problem as these are the people that are hardcore Radix Fans and no doubt are doing it for the benefit of Radix. Also it is a mix of Uniswap Buyers too.

Quote:Radix is nothing.

This is incorrect. Radix is a community. With or without smart contracts. We have a prime example, Cardano. Even without Smart Contracts they built a strong and vibrant community. When they do launch anything. Developers will forsure flock to meet dapp demand.

If you are going to do a survey, don't use people who are biased. Please use people who don't know about Radix

Ok, don't take out without Xi'an lol.

Sure... community. I can make my own coin, get some people and we are community.

The main strong point of Radix is infinite scalability without loosing security and Scrypto for easier development.

Without that, it's just another coin in CMC with it's own community.

What we need is TIME, patiently wait for devs to do their work and it will work out just great.

The last thing we want now is to put this price vesting in front of them, make them work on what they need to.

I believe we will get full unlock by Q3 2022 max or much sooner, wouldn't surprise me if EOY.

I don't think waiting for 1 year when they waiting for a muuuuuch longer time is hard to ask.

I disagree, I don't think we will get full unlocks. based off of Mainnet launch data. If LP incentive and Staking wasn't enough of an incentive to even push it to 50% of unlocked than where else will the demand. We need to do this sooner than later as we can easily use news to boost us higher and get new supporters.

FYI this isn't going to be instant. There will be news than a change, but everything will be transparent. We will probably wait until Alexandria release atleast and see what the price action and developer community looks like.

This is a classic chicken and egg problem. Developers look for something they can build for communities, but communities look for dapps to use. What if we end up with no developers due to no demand.

Also keep in mind, we aren't in a free market currently. We are held down due to fear of unlocks.

Mainnets usually don't have much affect on price at all. And the timing wasn't very good at all either, crypto market currently isn't that good.

1 month mainnet delay, Instapass and Instabridge delays and problems aren't helping at all.

Not to mention like I said process of getting XRD (not eXRD) is really bad compared to what other coins had.

You want XRD? Buy eXRD, move to Metamask, do KYC just for XRD swap on Instapass and use Instabridge with max $100k worth swap.

Im sure the problem with buying XRD and staking xrd will be solved within a month or two.

The Data that I am talking about is crypto Interest. I believe someone mentioned that in a telegram group that Pier did an AMA the main reason they were hesitant in investing and learning about Radix was due to the price vesting.

I don't really promote Radix, but this information is directly from hardcore shillers and community mods.

Ok. Now image full unlock happens. Price doesn't pump, APY gets from ~50% to ~25%, price dumps and whales still have plenty to sell from unlock.

What then? Who will be happy in this case? OG whales staking tons of Radix and people who want to get out of Radix ASAP with unlocked tokens.

What do you think community will do then?

I see XRD going up by 3% while BTC did 10% in that day and people are typing whole day why XRD isn't pumping compared to BTC.

Imagine this unlock, dump and cutting APY happens when BTC pumps hard, imo many, many people will sell their radix and go away.

Also lets make it clear PRICE WILL NOT INSTANTLY PUMP. IT WILL PROBABLY BE STAGNANT UNTIL WE FIND THE BOTTOM AND A BASE. THE GOAL IS TO GROW ORGANICALLY.

Then we grow organically with a free market without constraints.

A few of the mods talked to the OG whales. Most don't really want to sell as their thesis on investing haven't even been fulfilled. Why would they sell the price has barely even pumped. It has never made a crazy move, If I was an OG whale, I would wait until my thesis plays out.

Why will people go away? Aren't we in it for the tech?? Price doesn't go up anyways. (Doesn't even follow bitcoin even for a mid-cap)

People will stay because everyone I talk to has a 3-5 year outlook anyways. Even you stated that you don't care what happens until 2 + years.

So why not let the market finally be free? So many changed vesting to solve this problem. Also keep in mind this is the first time anyone has ever done Price Vesting in Crypto.

As someone who has been following this whole thread, pretty much everyone who has been hesitant to invest in Radix was hesitant because of the tokenomics, however I think most (not all) were more worried about the total supply than price-vesting.

Funny how this issue is blowing up now that staking is out. Seems to me that initial investors are butthurt that they can't stake the 65% of the Radix that are still locked up. They knew that their tokens would be locked behind price-vesting when they initially invested. The trade-off of getting tokens for $.03 is that it might be awhile before they're unlocked. They took that risk. And now that that risk didn't play out in their favor quickly enough they want to complain and change the rules so they can stake.

Does anyone have a resource that shows clearly what they agreed to? The whitepaper states in large, bolded, red letters "IF THE TOKEN UNLOCKING MILESTONES ARE NOT REACHED SOME TOKENS MAY REMAIN INDEFINITELY LOCKED." That clearly shows it is not a guarantee that they will ever get those tokens, let alone getting them before Olympia.

I understand there might be legitimate arguments to update the method of release, but it seems to me that this movement was started and is mainly driven by greedy initial investors who want all the upsides and to not own the risk they took on - and that leaves a bad taste in my mouth when considering if price-vesting should be changed.

I agree, the initial genesis and seed investors of course want to stake.

The problem is a delicate one because Uniswap / people bought on exchanges have an interest to not allow token releases.

It would be great if we can burn some of their token, but I assume there's noway we can do that. Or atleast a way for the foundation to cash them out at their invested price.

Funny how this issue is blowing up now that staking is out. Seems to me that initial investors are butthurt that they can't stake the 65% of the Radix that are still locked up. They knew that their tokens would be locked behind price-vesting when they initially invested. The trade-off of getting tokens for $.03 is that it might be awhile before they're unlocked. They took that risk. And now that that risk didn't play out in their favor quickly enough they want to complain and change the rules so they can stake.

Does anyone have a resource that shows clearly what they agreed to? The whitepaper states in large, bolded, red letters "IF THE TOKEN UNLOCKING MILESTONES ARE NOT REACHED SOME TOKENS MAY REMAIN INDEFINITELY LOCKED." That clearly shows it is not a guarantee that they will ever get those tokens, let alone getting them before Olympia.

I understand there might be legitimate arguments to update the method of release, but it seems to me that this movement was started and is mainly driven by greedy initial investors who want all the upsides and to not own the risk they took on - and that leaves a bad taste in my mouth when considering if price-vesting should be changed.

This. I hope we get 2-3 weeks heads up if they do a retarded move.

I know for sure if they do this, me and lots of my friends and people who I invited to invest in Radix that have same opinion as me will dump it all before it happens.

I rather have my investment in BTC than Radix if they change something that was agreed initially to favor whales. And as you said, the drama started since staking, not before.

And those who believed mainnet will 300% Radix, well, miracles ain't happening on daily basis.

If they want to go out without losing money, I'm sure we can gather people to buy their XRD at their investment price.

Edit: Or unlock amount of tokens that total worth is same as locked investment in $, other tokens are burned.

Yeah, people probably will dump, but then if there is a single whale that starts accumulating quick and fast. Then FOMO will start and can raise the price high quick.

The problem didn't really start after staking. People been talking about it since the start of price vesting. its just the mods usually just deleted the chat because it was considered FUD.

No idea, I wouldn't be upset if it was just some butthurt whales dumping.

Until next year there's no real reason why Radix should have any massive jumps causing the price unlocks. Apart from the enticing current staking rewards it's not super appealing, yet. Maybe once Bitfinex has XRD and people can easily stake (current situation with instapass/bridge is shit) that'll maybe reach an unlock.

If all price vested supply got unlocked, there goes the enticing rewards to bring in new investors and only benefits the early investors getting far more rewards.

Easiest place for me to buy Radix right now is Kucoin, and yes Trust wallet does accept it, however if you are planning on staking your radix I would deposit it on Meta Mask and convert the tokens from EXRD to XRD , not sure if you can convert them with Trust wallet, that only matters if you want to stake though.

Most people aren't even going to be able to swap significant amount of money on Bitfinex. They still have Limits to have much you can withdraw daily.

The thing that will have the most impact on staking rewards is when Instapass tier 3 / 4 is open.

Is it just me or is it interesting that suddenly, for the last two weeks, Radix has been gaining 1K followers on Twitter daily - a 275% increase?

Sure, Instabridge went live and all, but haven't really noticed an uptick in anything else and I'm surprised this has had pretty much no effect on the price, if organic. We'll see if the floodgates open when XRD goes live on Bitfinex, but I somehow doubt it.

They did no marketing pre mainnet (I believe the reason is they didn't want to market with nothing to show) and they are doing lots of paid marketing and AMAs now.

About the price, all I can see in live buys/sells is accounts with millions of XRD selling constantly. Price raises 5%, boom, one whale sells 200k out of few millions and we are back at almost 0% due to low liquidity.

As I said, I think it will take quite a lot of time to pump high since there is A LOT more XRD waiting to be sold at good prices.

Depends what you mean by "worry". eXRD isn't going anywhere, it's going to remain as their bridge to ERC20 or some shit, so you don't need to worry about swapping it before a certain date before it becomes useless.

You can't stake eXRD, so you won't be generating more tokens if you don't swap it.

Aishun - August 20, 2021, 6:38 am

Just a copy of my opinion on Radix price vesting that I also posted on Telegram.

Quote:1) "Price vesting is stopping Radix to raise in price"

I think that price vesting is just a minor thing in all this. I strongly believe that Radix is not rising in price a lot because of multiple reasons. First and the biggest reason in my opinion (after asking a few people on investing in Radix) is how hard it is currently to get Radix, you have to go through different transactions, do KYC and it takes all together days to get XRD. The second biggest thing is liquidity which is currently very bad for people that want to invest bigger amount of money in Radix. Personally, I know a few friends and few people on forums that want to buy millions of Radix and with current liquidity, that's almost impossible to do without raising the price for 50% or more, which is absurd. Third and fourth reason are price vesting and tokenomics. Price vesting and tokenomics aren't such a big turn-off for investors in my opinion after talking to many of them. A lot of us agree that tokenomics over the next 40 years will be a bigger turn-off later on that price vesting is now.

2) "Unlock helps Radix not only ICO buyers"

If this is true, then it's really a VERY short-term based statement. When full unlock happens, then price vesting will be just a history and Radix will be "free" as some of you want. My opinion is that unlock is favorable far more to ICO buyers than community. If unlock happens, APY will get quite low, which is one of the important things for Radix investors right now. To current investors after ICO that are staking, prices will crash and APY will get lowered, nothing good for them either.

Many people who are for full unlock of tokens agree that price may go back to $0.08-$0.10 for some time and then freely rise high. The question now is what will happen first, full unlock with price vesting or quick rise of price after full unlock crash? In my honest opinion, I would say 50/50, but with price vesting staying, there will be no more risk to it that it would be with unlock of all tokens.

This is my opinion, if someone doesn't agree with it, they are free to do so.

I also decided to unstake all my Radix so I have it available to sell if needed. Currently, there's a lot of uncertainty and I would rather sell before full unlock happens (if it even does) and buy in at later price, losing some stake rewards compared to stake Radix and lose a lot in value.

I believe that if full unlock happens, we'll dance between $0.06 and $0.10 for some time, could be wrong, but I do see a high possibility of huge price drop.

Yeah... im going to have to say NO to the token unlocks. Imagine another 3B xrd in the market... it would destroy the price and nuke the APY.

The current APY is 39% and only half of the tokens in circulation are staking. Let's just say half of the 4.2B xrd ends up getting staked thats 2.78x what is currently staked meaning the APY will naturally drop to about 14% APY. I'm not even taking into account how badly the price would get nuked. We hardly got 2M xrd staked to HF validator currently. Another 3B tokens??? I would be surprised if we were top 1000 then.

I'm waiting to try to gauge what way the vote seems to be leaning, but at that point it may be too late.

Radix is/was intended to be a long term hold for me, but I was incentivized by the [initially] high staking rewards, and I bought in to the current tokenomics. I'm not going to unnecessarily ride out a dump and cut my rewards by a large margin. If they proceed with this I'll probably sell out and wait to see how they're doing months down the road.

I could be wrong, but I don't think you can swap back from XRD to eXRD. If that's true then how do you all plan to exit?

Bitfinex on 23rd of August. Aaaand I also didn't know that unstaking requires XRD, now I'm stuck as well without paying tons for fees again and do annoying part of getting XRD.

What a conundrum.

Economics theory tells us that a huge increase in supply will drive price down, and coupled with a huge % of those new tokens likely to be staked meaning APY will take a hit.

It sounds like bad and worse news to my ears. However, people seem to think it will be better in the long-term. I've not yet read enough to understand that, but straight off of the bat, I suppose "getting it out the way now" means the release in supply later won't happen therefore the price will face less "challenges."

Is that a fair summary of the conundrum, have I missed anything major?

What may remain constant is the opportunity for the token, so whether they release the tokens or not, isn't it true that the project will be in a better position in 3-5 years, and therefore it changes nothing? If anything, the drop in token price means we can buy more, negating the APY decline we are likely to face? That is to say, I can bring my average buy price down, and my capital will grow greater than it would if this didn't happen.

Hope that makes sense.

Love the drama. :)

Sure, long-term. We would get there without unlocking as well, after full unlock, it makes no difference.

Right now, it only helps ICO buyers, node validators and people with raw cash to buy the dip.

People are seemingly saying it would encourage people into the market, any idea how that is true?

Listing on exchanges, lowering the barrier to entry, will do that.

I'm not sure releasing new supply does, at least it's not immediately obvious to me anyway.

You know that is the main argument of unlocking tokens lol?

To "free" the market, because everyone is saying price vesting is what keeps people from putting money in Radix.

Should I even mention how bad it is for people who can't access Bitfinex?
Instabridge won't be offering XRD->eXRD for months, not even planned for now.
Their XRD is stuck unless they sell it directly to someone, really terrible.

I sooo regret of not seeing that it takes XRD to unstake.
If someone has 5 XRD spare, let me know, we can make some sort of deal in your favor.

Yes US people are basically stuck.

Idk man. Im not a dev, but is it really that hard to make a bridge?

I believe the withdraw limits even if you use a proxy/VPN is pretty low on bitfinex. Also you run the risk of getting your funds locked on there. I read about nightmares on bitfinex if your not KYCd

Aishun - August 20, 2021, 3:41 pm

Just saying, again, how bad it is to purchase XRD. It would make me pay $35 to buy 3 XRD currently.

I guess I have to wait for 2 more days to buy on Bitfinex or pay almost $12 per XRD just to unstake my coins and delay the unstake for 2 days.

And people say price vesting is what keeps the price down, a normie with $50 would loose 70% and even someone with $500 would loose 7%.

I know I sent alot of info regarding price vesting, but I am pretty neutral on the subject now that I think about it.

The price vesting can go either way to be honest. Im not going to vote as I am humble enough to know Radix is trapped in a bad spot currently and have to trust the community and Radix to choose the right path.

Something Radix needs to do ASAP is do a hackathon and hire talent ASAP. They need to active search for talent, seems like they are overwhelmed.

Suddenly, lots of people even in Telegram are leaning towards no now when they were yelling yes few days ago.

I just don't understand, first shill for yes, now no, even a few bigger investors are leaning towards no now when team announced a poll.

Right now, I really hope full unlock does happen, because I believe in Radix, I'm currently unstaking and will be selling asap and wait for price crash with unlock.

I'll stock on much more tokens, hopefully it gets so low that I will get close to the amount of XRD per month with staking as I am right now or was..

Things change... I realized their dev team is not sufficient enough for crypto. Their 2way bridge won't be ready until a few months from now.

Basically anyone in the US is fugged if their staking right now.

Omniscient, great debate in Radix Discord regarding, strong arguments and most of others look like apes trying to argue with you.

Since you asked "How many HF's are here" decided to write about it here.

About "

To all the HF people that invested. I am sorry. I didn't anticipate this sort of nonsense when I recommended this project as an investment."

Already done that 2 days ago. Epoch 901 and my XRD is unstaked and will be sold immediately. Not your fault at all.

What is going right now is absurd. I do have to say that more people are against full unlock now, but damage has been done.

Whatever happens now, price will suffer in my opinion.

I'll be buying back in Radix only if 1) price gets ridiculously low ($0.03 or lower) or 2) few months before Xi'an if it won't be overvalued.

So the poll already ended? the vote ended up being yes? I'm a little lost

Also do you really think it could hit 0.03 with the full unlock? Honestly I was expecting it to drop to around 0.07 (probably the lowest 0.06) when the bear market hits which could be in a few months, I feel like Radix will not have anything that could pump or maintain the current price until 1 year from now when more things about the project will be launched, so 0.07 seemed like a doable target, but damn 0.03? Im not saying that it cant but I genuinely don't know if its possible, I don't know enough about this "unlock" mess thats going on right now.

(Aug 21, 2021 10:10 PM)Tesseract.mk Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Is everyone jumping ship on this project or going to wait and see how it plays out?

Personally yes, I don't see anything good as a trader/investor in the near future.

1) Full unlock happens -> price plummets even before that, with full unlock even lower and lots of XRD in whale wallets that keep waiting for price to go up a bit to sell again and again and again until they are out

2) No full unlock happens -> people will believe what is going on right now, that price vesting is what keeps the price down and price will never be more than $0.185(for some reason people really believe that), that makes people quit and sell as well, causing the price to go down

I see only one solution to fix this ASAP as dumb as it may sound, I think this would be the best for everyone. Aggressive marketing, lots of money spent for every possible marketing there is to gain more awareness, more interest in project, more shillers ("moon boys") to get us past $0.43 without removing price vesting, then EVERYONE WINS.

No, first survey is Monday, August 23rd until 23:59 UTC Sunday, August 29th. 1 KYC on Instapass

= 1 vote

Second survey is from September 1st through to 23:59 UTC Sunday, September 5th. 1XRD staked/hold on Instapass approved Radix wallet address = 1 vote.

September 10th will be announcement of results.

Edit:

About the price. Personally, yes, it could happen. You have to take in mind that until September 10th there will be a huge fear of price crash, many already unstaked and are waiting for unstaking period to be over to sell. More and more people will unstake until then. If vote passes and full unlock will happen in the future, then fear of price crash will be there from September 10th until full unlock happens, more and more people selling, there will be slowly a bit more buy pressure because of low price, but if it's gonna take weeks/months, we could see it hit $0.05-$0.07 even before full unlock imo.

Omniscient - August 21, 2021, 10:40 pm

I just spent 4 hours arguing the unlock in their Discord channel. I am against it. Maybe my stance is wrong and it is a path to success long-term but I am almost certain based upon my own self-interest that I will be financially harmed if the early unlock happens.

Quote:Is everyone jumping ship on this project or going to wait and see how it plays out?

I unfortunately have no choice. I have to stick to my long-term plan and pray this doesn't do irreparable harm. I think if you can get out without much financial harm then sell. If you have eXRD still and can swap then SELL asap. Buying back would be your choice in both timing and price.

Quote:So the poll already ended? the vote ended up being yes?

Poll starts the 23rd and ends the 29th. But many feel like it's going to go YES. If devs are serious about accepting the results of the poll then it's likely the unlock will be planned in the coming months.

And imho, we will see XRD $.03 out of this.

Quote:I see only one solution to fix this ASAP as dumb as it may sound, I think this would be the best for everyone. Aggressive marketing

I see the solution as patiently waiting for development. Aggressively working to build a functioning ecosystem of apps is more important than what price XRD is on an exchange. Radix doesn't need moon boys. I am solid into Divi for years too. It has some decent highs and lows but they are under development just moving forward slowly but surely. No moon is needed to succeed long term.

Anyone arguing that we will see whales buy Radix and that price won't plummet is a moron. Not enough trade volume to justify the release at this time, and when I say not enough trade volume, that's because there is ZERO trade volume as XRD isn't on any exchange. So this is bullshit we are even having this debate at this time. It's not even giving Radix a chance to get listed and have some organic growth. Heck, the unlock happens at certain price levels which are not unreasonable to meet in 6 months or a year. But those unlocks happen because the market is there. You don't create a market demand by flooding it with tokens. Dumb dumb dumb.

Joy - August 21, 2021, 10:51 pm

I bet it is, unlock shillers say that this is normal for XRD, I don't think so lmao, but you can't make a point anywhere anymore against them.

To Shreder, yes, that guy James on Discord is unfair, also on Telegram unofficial channel, James Radbull, not sure if that's the same person.

Multiple people messaged me about them being banned after asking me a question regarding my statements, but they were banned immediately.

I assume, because I made some strong statements which they couldn't argue with, so they got butthurt in Telegram and people who tried to side with me, bam.

This saddens me and I am done on Discord and Telegram about this now.

Epoch 901, I hope Bitfinex exists and works, I hope there is no problem sending XRD out of my Radix wallet and I will be fine.

I will sell XRD ASAP then, most likely the price will drop a lot more next ~10 days, so it will probably be quite a big loss for me sadly.

Edit: until September 10th, I expect price ~$0.08 after seeing how many big wallets are starting to sell and have tons more exrd to sell.

Now do the math and ask yourself what will the price be if full unlock happens. Some would say great point to get in for cheap.

However I'm seriously questioning Radixdlt and community decisions now and recently I found out anyone can just copy Radix and if they're ahead they will win.

Just found out a little bit more.

Today, few teams were created from competitor crypto groups (not approved by their leaders, and they were banned and messages deleted right after).

Those teams (not a lot of members, however they still exist) have plan to take advantage of this situation to put gas on this fire with more FUD and potentially convert Radix believers to them.

There's been 2 screenshots of this posted in Radix unofficial telegram but were immediately removed for some reason and users most likely banned.

This isn't going to end soon or good either imo.

I could unstake now and wait for the 2 weeks for it to be able to use, only to find the price has either crashed completely or it's bounced back and all I've done is lost 2 weeks worth of rewards.

We knew this was a long term, high risk and potentially very high rewards, we've hit a little turbulence and a lot of people have lost their shit. I'm not comfortable with what's going on, but I can't do anything about it. I'll just wait and see what happens, I still have faith in the project.

Meh, what little XRD I have I will keep staked and just ride it out to see what happens. I am against the unlock but I think it's inevitable.

What I do strongly believe in is the tech, and the vision Dan + the team have for the future. Could be that my tokens are worth $0.01 for the next 3 years whilst they work on things, only to be worth $1+ one day.

It's concerning thinking about what these whales will do with all of these tokens they get from the unlock though - a small group could easily orchestrate a complete takeover of the top 100 validator nodes with that kind of wealth. I only hope they are generous and kind enough to spread it evenly over those in the community if they choose to stake it. This is the sentiment they have put forward in the Discord/Telegram but only time will tell if they keep their word.

I assume it will pump after major crash, yes, so I'll be buying just to gain some profit from that.

But if that won't create "hype" and "big investors that are held back by price vesting" that everyone is talking about and not rise quickly, I'll be out again.

Okay so .. i thought a lot today. But i think i am fairly chill right now after seeing massive support level at around 0.1 otherwise i would be really still bitching about it. I am still not supporting the decision, but i did treat @fuseleer a bit unfair so .. sorry Dan completely my stupidity. But i am still thinking that was pretty thoughtless idea especially with that timing .. ANYWAY.

What the hell i will do ?

I will probably will wait little bit more dumping and load more because at the end tech is not changed and team still working on it. If unlock idea is not going to working i will keep buzz them but meanwhile i will try to lower my average price as possible. ICO price was 0.039c so its like x2-3 for them right now but without liquidity THEY CANNOT SELL without losing money. Also too much people waiting that dip to load more and lower their average so i dont think anymore there will be massive sell wall because we are too close to ICO price already, nobody can be that stupid to sell for lose if they are whales will buy all of them(included me). Of course in middle term there will be kinda hard limits because of unlock but i think it will happen at around 0.43-1$ range so nothing to worry about long term investors actually. About "Peachy" guy he is not trader i think he just want to live "normal" life with stake rewards and his bag(if i am not wrong 30-40m tokens) enough to make it happen. There is a lot of guy like this in radix group like "WonderWoman" etc. these people basically pretty big whales and accumulating huge amounts of tokens so these "dips" wont be here for long time. So I think my only target is lowering my entry point at this point I guess ?

After my anger today it might be sounds ridiculous but after thinking without vodka I come up with that conclusion. So I will try to lower my entry point at this point, I do not think anything below 0.03-0.05 will be possible it's really too hard but if happens I have over 500k$ sitting to buy that dip. If anyone wondering I am still holding around 7m token I did not sell anything like many people today. I still thinking anything below 0.15 is amazing entry point in long term but below 0.1 sick.

Life - August 22, 2021, 1:28 pm

Honestly after getting seriously annoyed at this whole situation I am just going to try make the best of it as I am locked up in staking anyway and have no control what so ever over selling at the moment. If the price drops to seriously low levels I will stock up further and continue to stake. That is the best thing I can think of doing in this bad situation. I am not willing to sell at a 50% loss. I would rather lose it all.

Edit: Just wanting to add this.. Everyone on the Discord is either 100% yes or 100% no.. There is no middle ground.. So I thought why not move the price vesting to another metric such a KYC Wallets? Everyone is mainly complaining about the price barriers stopping growth... IF the metric is changed to KYC Wallets their "price barriers" are removed but tokens still unlock with the growth of the token as I would estimate at least 50%+ of people will KYC for staking or are KYC'd to exchanges anyway.. This also increases the use of Instapass which I am sure the team also wants right?

I could be wrong in saying this but I am just putting ideas out there cause at the moment it is a complete shit show... Let me know what you guys think.

As someone from the US I feel like I got burnt a bit here but oh well. Still like the project long term but I would've reassessed when I entered and I don't even have the option to try and get out and reenter based on which way I think this things going cuz I already converted and staked, and there's no exchange in the US for XRD, so I take a hit either way.

I'm not gonna vote in the poll because I don't know what's best after reading back and forths on the Discord. All in all this is just annoying more than anything and admittedly a bit off-putting. Idk.

It's a long debate. I will break it in a nutshell for you.

half of the community members want radix to change their tokenomics, for now estimate 65% tokens are locked that are supposed to be unlocked with certain price accomplishments. Their argument is that this is a price suppressing mechanism which is keeping radix under the radar.

On the other hand if they go through unlocks, it's bad for us because we are looking at a major price crash + this could hurt our node position and APY goes down the hill.

Go to Radix's telegram for price discussion. Lots of debate points you can go through, even omni's discord comments are pinned there.

It's not that I missed your point, but with radix the price has stayed in the same range pretty much throughout the entire bull market. I think the guy can live without 2k tokens lol. You've been trying to make your points for almost a year now, we get it, but when will results start to show? Mainnet did nothing to the price. If you can afford to lose $100, then I think you should stake. It will either be worth $1-$10 or if what people are predicting with full unlock is going to be true, potentially $1000+ few months to few years.

What you need to know is that voting is happening for or against unlock.

If full unlock goes through, the price will dip, but there are buy orders that are fighting buy orders, so I assume not for a very long time.

If Radix gets higher on CMC, gets some more publicity, awareness, and "investors" that said to buy $millions worth of XRD after full unlock, we'll be higher.

And, if the above doesn't happen, I think full unlock will be a death penalty of the coin because of the community decision.

Does it though? You have to decide that on your own.

I personally think full unlock is risky and can kill the project while no unlock would be long wait, but safe play.

Besides that, we'd be having 40% APY instead of 10%-15% that's going to be after full unlock.

Sorry at long term is nothing changed and it is their fault to invest into long term project at the middle of bull run and expecting huge movements. I am pretty sure everyone include omni said there might or not might be movement for atleast one or couple years. And you think Radix did that bad of a job with marketing? They paid many millions, YouTube channels, influencers, crypto communities, real-life ads, etc. There is currently no interest in investing. They also spent lots of money to research why is it not getting that popular or price to follow others. The majority stated that only after fully unlock since before that, they don't know the floor and real value of Radix.

Besides, Radix has/will have much better technology, so Radix wins on that.

Also check <https://www.notoros.io/> a huge plus for Radix on this one, easy to create dApps on ETH and then migrate to Radix later on, which is gonna play a huge role soon in my opinion for Radix popularity.

After that, I think Radix also has a BIG advantage with their own stable coin if they do it. Solana and Avalance do not have that in their plans. Stable coin on technology like that with $0.01 fees per transaction always and unlimited scaling, tons more TPS than both of them... who wins?

I was really against unlock at first, however I'm spending hours and hours last week on Telegram and Discord (10+ at least) and I came to conclusion that it might be really needed, because we need to catch up with competitors until at least the end of 2023 when Xi'an comes out, which is in my opinion fully possible.

Another strong point (may not seem now, but I think crypto will get heavily regulated with KYC, especially defi), Instapass. This will be also huge in the future I believe and big advantage over the competitors.

Is the logic not true? Eth survived 2 cycles and went above ATH, so I would say that Eth is not a shitcoin because of this.

Some 2017 coins barely even touched ATH, like LTC,BCH and many more.

Agreed. I'm starting to get slightly bullish about the unlock even though it has its risks and nothing is obviously guaranteed. It could backfire. But the fundamentals of Radix are insane so might as well try this since I wasn't super fond of price vesting in the first place. Curious to see what the end result will be.

Here's my prediction.

1) Short dump and then pump after unlock, then mostly down until it's penny coin and almost dies

OR

2) Short dump and then pump after unlock, slowly rising, skyrocketing EOY (IF market allows it) after Scrypto and Alexandria, getting peak (top10-top20 mcap) about Babylon release time.

I believe after full unlock we'll most likely see option 2, because apart from current price and FUD, Radix is way better than competitors as long as they deliver what they promise (and also due to some private knowledge about new bigger potential investors, Peachy can share this information with you if he wants)

Edit:

Just got some interesting screenshots/proof.

Radix team didn't want to change PV, they were almost forced to and annoyed by current investors. Main ones you know and that we all hate are James and tesslerc, one that doesn't know how to dump and other one threatening with legal actions if there won't be full unlock.

This unlock discussion is being forced and constantly mentioned since March-May this year and pushed Radix team to do this vote (even though they stated they shouldn't change and the tech is priority, hitting .43 without full unlock as well, just not now).

If anyone wants proof, send me a pm/convo and I'll send it to you if you're interested.

ALSO, if you don't want to get banned, you can't put screenshots or even mention this on Discord or any Telegram group.

Edit 2:

Also, marketing "strategy" leaked. They scale the marketing with more releases (alexandria, babylon, xi'an) since it's more cost effective later on when the tech is released.

I realised I was never removing PV, or the unlock per-se. It is not an issue. But I am against just straight up giving a bunch of people tokens prematurely in advance of the deal they had, and I firmly think if the price drops, then new investors (me included) are being disproportionately impacted. The way it's being done is what disappoints me most.

But it is what it is. Let's see how it goes. I'm buckled in and ready to average down.

Yeah that sucks. Being forced (or perceiving the feeling of being forced) into investing more JUST to mitigate this, is disgusting.

All being said, please don't invest more than you can afford to lose sir. There are more things in this world than this investment. Fingers crossed this is quickly forgotten and you can be given the freedom of options (which have been removed from you due to these early investors) and then you can once again feel free to divest or invest in your own terms. :)

Most likely the price will go up, but in a few months/years.

Wait until the unlock (possible dip) and then buy on Bitfinex (Kucoin has 300exrd withdrawal fee). On bitfinex you will be able to exchange exrd to xrd and stake it if you want the emission rewards.

"The final Radix Token Unlock will happen on September 15th! ?

All preparations for the unlock are now completed! We will be doing the final unlock of (e)XRD on September 15th, 2021 between 14:00-17:00 UTC.

The very high level of staking, tremendous excitement following the Olympia launch, and upcoming Alexandria release – combined with a strong community majority favoring the unlock – indicates an exceedingly high degree of confidence by the community and token holders in Radix.

The Radix core team agrees that now is the right time to proceed with unlocking all (e)XRD. This move represents one of the most effective ways to accelerate the distribution of stake, decentralization, and network adoption. ?

Therefore, we will be doing the final unlock of (e)XRD on September 15th, 2021."

I am really really really wondering results lets hope best.

Dan should be ashamed of his Mod team on Discord just saying, appreciate all the work you're doing coding away in your dark room but these kids are retarded. price is going to dip no matter what scenario A :- unlocked tokens being dumped , will obviously cause a dip no question about this scenario B :- unlocked tokens staked, will make the staking rewards less for others and many will be motivated to sell because of less staking rewards

i don't see the unlocked tokens just being "held" by anyone, why would they? so either way there is going to be a dip on or before Sep 15 , in scenario A the dip is going to be pretty big and fast, in scenario B the dip will be slow paced, but that doesn't mean there wont be a run up , i believe and hope the price goes up after the dust has settled , but who knows

But if it doesn't dip, then it could be a waste of time or even worsen your position.

Looking at the SOL unlock there were no dips after the release of tokens, only a couple of days prior to it, similar to how it's been for Radix the past couple of days / weeks.

After the day of unlock (jan 7) it only went uphill. Now just maybe we might be looking at similar results for Radix after tomorrow.

Exactly, and how many exchanges did SOL have? I know they are compared a lot by under the basic assumption that SOL unlocked and it was a good thing so it must be a good thing for Radix too. That's not great critical thinking because it doesn't compare their marketing and development markers.

Not to say I can't be wrong that Radix will enjoy a benefit from the unlock. I actually hope I am wrong. I just don't see it when it comes to the math of releasing 5x the supply to such a small market.

Radix we can only hope has huge plans that we are unaware of.

This sell alone tanked the price by nearly 70%, and follow up panic sells saw the price fall below 2 cents for a short period of time, before rebounding back to $0.10 within the hour. I've seen a lot of big sells today, but there has also been a lot of resiliency toward dropping below about $0.08. We keep climbing back above it. Yep.

Pre-Unlock

More CEX's would have allowed everyone to be on equal footing. Everyone would have had an equal opportunity to navigate the unlock debates and subsequent unlock event as they saw fit.

However, this would never fly... The Radix Foundation needed us trapped in their ecosystem so that their early investor buddies could get paid. No trapped American = less liquidity to dump on.

Post-Unlock

More liquidity, more eyes on, more places to both buy and sell...

Volume would definitely be up. I have no idea what difference this would make, whether good or bad, but it would definitely make a difference.

A single whale can tank us right now. Pay attention to price movement after trades in the 100,000-250,000 XRD range. If trades as small as those can move prices as much as they do, a singular whale can drop us right back down to sub $0.05 prices, and if the wrong people decide to panic and sell too, those $0.02 prices are very possible to see again.

We've done a good job rebounding back to $0.10 so far, but we haven't faced much yet.

Pump is likely whales waited on the sideline for the unlock. Shit must be going on behind the scenes.

Also our validator is done. Unstake from it. We won't get back into top 100. I have already unstaked mine and will shut the server down and use it for something else (or not).

I've been angry about all this and today I wake up with just sheer disappointment. I was right to be afraid of the unlock hurting my plans and investment. I got "whaled". Because of my anti-unlock vocal rants I believe we got pushed out intentionally. Sorry to our community, it's a tough situation.
And fugg you to the whales that are manipulating this.

The good news, Radix price is up so what you lose in rewards for 2 weeks hopefully you're happy that the price has increased.

I'm gonna have to spend a lot of time thinking on my response to this. But for now, unstake asap so you can get into a new Validator in 2 weeks.
