The scammer took a six month vacation ban. Probably thinks you will forget about this and he can come back in August to scam some more.

It is sad man , to some people 350$ isnt shit , but to me that was a startup for an exchange shop , I will be fine but just an L to learn from.

It seems like  has done some very suspicious things within the last 24-48 hours, and I hope he resolves his active disputes soon. It is hard to tell who is telling the truth in some instances like this one at the time, but over time I think people can show their true colors. De??oid claims he never received any money and apparently self banned immediately after for six months. Both sides of the story are speculative, but if OP can not resolve his current disputes I would believe that De??oid is telling the truth and the self ban was just coincidental because of his hospitalization.

Sucks to see Neo scam, but this is a common thing scammers do. They wait for their victims to get banned or leave, and then all of a sudden reply, and claim innocence.

De??oid has 7 open disputes, and at least 1 more accusation that I saw from a now closed member.

Go respond to those De??oid

This user <https://hackforums.net/member.php?action=profile&uid=4136716> is making false claims. I have responded to my other disputes.

Lmao nah, that guy definitely is a scammer. And so is neo. Just because someone he scammed is also a known scammer now doesn't negate any previous disputes against him. The logic behind this entire post.... Cringe everything you said. Unfortunately some people throw away a lot of opportunity on this forum over a few hundred or thousand dollars, and that's wack.
