Doomslayer - March 3, 2021, 10:48 pm

Holy shit that sound. Probably the last thing you wanna hear when in the middle of the ocean.

Pretty sure that's the 2nd last thing you wanna hear.

If you're wondering about the last thing you wanna hear, that would be "release the kraken"

Gonna have to disagree. If I was gonna die at sea, I'd wanna die fighting a kraken.

More or less yeah, like how can a ship break in half and not have classic music playing on the deck?

Cooligan - March 4, 2021, 12:17 am

Holy shit. Because it's in 3 parts like that it almost looks like it's intentionally flexible, until you hear the "cyka blyat"'s coming from the crew.

flavoral get your ships in order.

Meet in the middle. Getting sucked off while fighting the kraken.

I can agree to that, holding your mermaid like a slut while fighting the kraken. The should have done that in Pirates of the Caribbean parodoi movie ?

All good till your ship breaks in half

Haha yeah the instant you hear Russians freaking out you know it's bad.

Anatoli_Smorin - March 4, 2021, 10:25 am

This is what's called a catastrophic stress fracture.

The constant bending and twisting of the ship's hull in the motion of the ocean waves, over the course of years or decades of operation, can cause cracks to form in the ships hull, which can fail catastrophically, resulting in what you see below here.

Stress fractures have capsized many a ship throughout maritime history.

Damn, that's crazy. Maintenance is always important. I feel for the families of the victims. ?

SuperiorUser - March 4, 2021, 10:38 am the guy recording from the other ship sounded so casual about it...

Anatoli_Smorin - March 4, 2021, 11:11 am

The ship in the original post, the MV Arvin, was almost 50 years old and was in a very bad state of repair.

It's no surprise why it cracked in half.

Hired aqua man to hit the ship?

Anatoli_Smorin - March 4, 2021, 2:51 pm

This video demonstrates how ships bend and flex in storms and rough seas.

Ships are designed to flex like this (to an extent) but over time it can cause wear and tear on the hull and superstructure.

Doesn't have to be welders, management could have cut on maintenance to make more profit.
Sadly management doesn't always understand the need for maintenance, they think "if it's not broken then don't touch it"

Lmao this reminds me of the government in my homeland. You see roads toward buildings with holes big like moon craters, but if some top guy is going to visit that building in the next days, the big machines come and fix the road as new ??

someone crashes with an old plane -> cmon let's inspect all planes before something happens, everyone scratching their balls?

That's how it is in the States, unfortunately. All corporations usually care about is their bottom line.
