Anybody else been watching so far, thoughts? I was pretty hyped to see it come back and have been enjoying it.

As an anime-only, I've heard good things about this arc. I'm glad they came back with a whopping 25 episodes. Love how they're focusing on Endeavor position as the number one hero, surpassing All Might now, and his family situation.

Some folks didn't appreciate the filler first episode, per MAL, but I thought it was well-needed to remind the audience of the dynamics of the class.

Always loved the strategic aspect of the show based on each party's quirks.

I was happy with the focus on Endeavor as well, I'm excited to see where they go with that and his family as well. They do a good job at keeping you intrigued. I'm also extremely interested in seeing Shinso's development and having more involvement in the hero course.

I can see why some may have not enjoyed the first episode however I agree completely it was a nice refresher on the ending of season 4 in my opinion.

Yes, Shinso's quirk is awesome and I can't wait to see how it's used against real villains this season. I actually want to see what will become of Mirio and Eri; will Mirio get his quirk or maybe inherit All Might's, and will Eri eventually end up in UA to train or something along those lines?

Can't wait ?

Yeah I really think he'll prove to be useful in fights, even more so than he already has. I can't believe I almost forgot about Eri though, it'd be really cool to see her attending UA. I hope to see her character stick around at the very least. She was a large part of the plot at one point, and with that impressive of a quirk they gotta show us some development of it.

So far this seasons had me waiting for the next episode as soon as it's over, it's been awesome. Now just to wait a few more days for another episode lmao.

My prediction: Eri is going to be a powerhouse when she grows up, battling for #1 hero with Deku and Bakugo.

Dude, I'm so tempted in starting the manga but then the whole cycle will begin again of waiting for a CHAPTER every week. So conflicted!

neightworks. - April 21, 2021, 6:56 pm

Show completely lost in s3 for me, the characters and the plot were just too much. Not to mention how boring it is to watch a self destructing MC in this manor. It's one thing to have a show about a main character breaking himself in a mental sense, but a character literally breaking his bones to do anything substantial is quite lame. The Index series had the same flaw.

That'd make for a hell of a show, I can see the two battling it out over #1 for sure but adding in Eri would make for something badass. I actually did start the manga as I was watching the show but over time it just led to me only watching it, now I'm so invested in the show I'm not sure I'd want to read further ahead lmao.

I can understand this completely, I believe I just took a strong liking to quite a few characters and I've enjoyed watching them develop. But I can't lie I enjoyed Midoriya's slow paced development but I do see how it can be annoying to have him injured every fight he was in. I believe it was done on purpose though as he goes from being a regular kid to being handed the power of the #1 hero. It shows how difficult it was for him to get a handle on it.

For sure they definitely know how to draw an audience and keep them entertained. One of my favorite things so far about the show is there's never really a lack of substance. No fillers, just all packed episodes with intense plots I love it.

The more I think about it I start to get excited and want to just read it?

Yeah as far as action/fighting has gone, there hasn't been too much major stuff happening yet. So I can totally get that, a lot of this season so far has been development of certain characters.

I haven't read the manga either, just the first few volumes. I see where you're coming from though, this season so far has been a bit slower than some of the action packed plot of the first few seasons. I'm excited to see where it goes though and what the next major arc will be.

But he's slowly becoming an awesome character to me, and I'm sure he'll be bringing awesome things to the table and maybe even doing things that All Might was never able to achieve.

I haven't read the manga, and I don't plan on reading it just yet, but these are my thoughts. ?

As for the current beginning of this season, I think it's safe to say it's pretty boring so far. I'm sure this will last us 15 episodes, and a new arc will start. I'm hoping that in the second arc of the season, things will start to hype up. Honestly, for me, the only good thing about S4, was the last episode with Endeavor's Prominence Burn, but that's just my opinion!

Totally agree, things are slow for the moment. I'm hyped for more action to pick up as well. I do have to say though I definitely relate to what you said about Endeavor. I actually really disliked his character when he was first introduced, he's been growing on me since he's become #1 though, I'm really curious to see where they take his character and interested in seeing where him and Todoroki's relationship goes now that Endeavor is trying to rekindle it.

Oh wow I hadn't heard anything about that I really hope not. I looked it up and it seems there will be more seasons to come, I'm not 100% sure though. I'm pretty sure there's quite a bit more storyline to the manga though so I hope they keep it going! :)

MarvinMalware - May 15, 2021, 9:18 am

(May 15, 2021 07:15 AM)Tsundere Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Episode 8, aka Episode 96:

Decent episode if I say so myself. More than the last few episodes, I would say the ending of this one was pretty good. As I mentioned before about my Endeavor character development, I liked the Todoroki and Iida development in this one. Iida was really impressive, probably the most I've seen him before. I was not expecting him to appear from anywhere and save Todoroki as he did.

Additionally, seeing Todoroki use one of the skills his father taught him, not only shows that his connection with his father is getting slightly better, but he's more comfortable using his fireside, which I think is awesome. You are born with two abilities, might as well use both, huh? Although we know why he doesn't like to use the fireside so much, as mentioned before, we can see that a change in Todoroki, just like there has been a change in Endeavor.

While the match ended in a draw, I do like that. It goes to show that the two teams still have a long way to go, but as Shishida (the beast quirk guy) stated, in a real-life situation holding off and waiting for help is a smart tactic. So while it may not have ended as climatic as we wanted, at the end where everyone was having small-chit chat in the doctor's office, we were able to hear what they needed to improve on, and I find that information valuable and an awesome cliffhanger, and that enough was climatic for me.

Next match we get to see Bakugo's team. For once this season, I am looking forward to the next episode. We can see from the preview that he has something up his sleeve. Considering his gung-ho attitude towards everything, I can't help but want to see the next episode. And considering who is on his team, either Bakugo is going to be a one-man-army and do things all by himself while his team struggles on their own without a "leader" so to speak, or they'll all work together which would be a surprise. The only time we've really seen Bakugo work together is with Kirishima and Kaminari.

I'm not saying that Bakugo's team is useless, what I meant about them struggling, is if Bakugo decides to do things on his own, that may or may not cause a problem since this is a team effort. As we saw character developments for so many different people, I'm really hoping we get something new out of Bakugo these next few episodes.

Off-topic: Whenever I hear Bakugo's voice actor, Okamoto Nobuhiko, I can't help but feel a weird tingle in my throat every time he talks! I hope he isn't damaging his throat too much when he talks like he does. However, whenever I hear him in different anime, and he isn't screaming his lungs out every line, it also feels weird lmao. His clean voice (not screaming) has a rough feel to it as well, and it just feels weird not to hear him scream!

I love the way you summarized this I agree 100%, I just finished the episode before I came to see your reply lol.

Seeing the character development throughout this one was definitely thrilling and they really gave Iida a chance to shine with that rescue. Even just seeing his new level of power and the backstory behind his family's tradition of strengthening their quirk was really cool.

The fight between Tetsutetsu and Todoroki was amazing, definitely one of the best out of this season so far. However I may be saying differently after the next match because I agree Bakugo's for sure got something planned and it's bound to be entertaining.

I had never really put any thought into what you said about Bakugo's voice actor but I can totally see why you say that. His voice sounds like it would be incredibly hard/uncomfortable to put on for that length of time. He does a phenomenal job though.

I believe Midoriya is in the 5th match correct? I am thinking match #4 and #5 are going to be awesome. Just a prediction, but I think we'll see some new stuff from Midoriya too, especially since he saw the first holder of One For All in the vision. I wouldn't be surprised if he saw him again in another vision during match #5.

I could probably read ahead (if the current chapter of the manga goes this far), but I like the surprise of things.

Edit: I also think it's safe to say that after this season, we shouldn't take B class so lightly. While they may be "supporting" characters, they still do a great job.

Agreed, Momo's team losing was a reminder to not sleep on Class B and that they can hold their own against Class A and maybe even supervillains.

Personally, I've caught up to the end of season 4 in the manga and might read ahead if I get the time. I'm just too impatient ?

For sure, class B really showed they have plenty of skill and have been working and getting ready to show it off to class A. I think that's a really probable prediction for match 5 though, I have a strange feeling Shinso is going to cause Midoriya quite a bit of trouble. I am getting even more excited as the week goes on though, to see what Bakugo's plan is, he's never usually the type to plan ahead rather just running straight into the action.

(May 22, 2021 11:01 AM)Tsunidere Wrote: CITE New episode released today! Episode 9 AKA 97:

While the fourth match was very quick, we were able to see more character development, this time with Bakugo. Everyone here, Beherit and MarvinMalware all agreed that we were going to see something new with him, and we surely did. I was truly impressed with how well he worked together with his teammates. Just like All Might got chills, I sort of did when he said "When you're in danger, I'll help you. When I'm in danger, you help me." I mean, that's pretty obvious, right? However, I think we shouldn't take that line for granted. This is a Bakugo we have never seen before, and those words hit way differently after seeing how he acted.

It's awesome that they were able to 4-0 just like that. We can't forget Jiro, Satou (the muscle dude), and Sero (tape dude) did help too. I wouldn't say Satou had any development, same with Jiro, but we were able to see quick decision making through Sero, where he used the knowledge from Jiro listening to the lizard girl's sounds, as well as general observation to keep her off track. Looked it up, Lizard girl's name is Tokage.

Sero was right, she is just like Momo where when she is flustered at the moment, she can't think straight. So that is definitely something both of them need to work on. I must say, during the preview of episode 8, they made her more of a problem than she seemed to be. I like that they did that. It gave us a sense of, "wow this is going to be a challenge and very interesting".

We're onto match number 5! I believe this match won't go into episode 11, and will just be most, or all of episode 10. If anything, maybe we'll get a few fillers until they release the second arc? But that's thinking too much ahead!

Through the previews for episode 10, we can get a small hint that something is going to happen to Midoriya and I am super excited to see if he gets any character development. All of Team B agree that they should focus on Midoriya. Midoriya himself says that he needs to keep moving, so it would be really interesting if he uses the skills he learned from Gran Torino. I mean, what was the point of the training arc if he doesn't use the skills he learned during his internship, right?

Let's hope for a good episode next week!

Edit:

I can't forget the small fan-service they gave us of Mina. ?

He was way more confident than he usually is (which is saying quite a bit lmao). He's most definitely progressing as a hero which is awesome to see. I'm hyped to see what's up next with Midoriya and Shinso, this is going to make for another extremely good episode in my opinion.

Something i really love about this season and previous seasons is the way they just nail the way they use their soundtracks during episodes at the perfect time. They're able to make scenes so much more impactful and awesome just cause they exactly know how to use their soundtracks during episodes.

Been loving season 5, can't wait for upcoming episodes :).

Toga stole the show with her backstory in this latest episode! Loved it!

You know interestingly enough I was thinking the same thing yesterday when I was watching. They really did step up their game in that field.

(Jul 10, 2021 11:40 AM)Tsundere Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Last week's episode was unfortunately delayed, due to another show buying the timeslot that My Hero usually airs at, from what I read. Well, I am happy to say that this season is finally getting good. I can already predict that there has to be a sixth season. Considering the fact that Midoriya still has to master six other of the hidden quirks that he has yet to even use yet, and has no idea what powers he holds. I could be wrong, but the fact that he has six other quirks makes me feel that this anime can go on for so long, whether people like it or not.

This episode focuses on Bakugo, Midoriya, and Shouto and gaining more experience in the field during their internship. We get to see how a pro hero works once again, through the perspective of Endeavor. As mentioned earlier, I said that I'm starting to like him more and more. At this point, he really is becoming one of my favorite pro heroes, if not my favorite pro hero. I thought All Might was cool, but I never really liked him enough to be my favorite pro hero. However, I will admit I do miss him being the #1 hero.

We get to see small character development, mostly with Shouto and Bakugo. We get to learn what their weaknesses are and what they need to improve them, by learning to control flash fire. Additionally, we get to see what Midoriya needs to focus on as well.

The next episode will hopefully be exciting too. I like how similar to season two, we will get to see how the other students are doing in their internships. Season 2 was probably my favorite, and I really enjoyed watching how the other characters performed during their internships, so seeing how they've improved since then will be even more fun to watch.

So I got real busy and let the show gather quite a few episodes which I binged in a few hours lol. I'm impressed, I really enjoyed this season as a whole. However I do feel a bit disappointed with how it ended on such a cliffhanger I'm probably going to have to start reading the manga again if I don't go check out that new movie sometime soon.

Tsundere I feel the same way about Endeavor, he's been really, really growing on me. Seeing Todoroki mature, and decide he wants to accept his fathers teaching was also a huge step as he's only going to become much, much stronger as time goes on learning how to use flashfire. Also having Midoriya, and Kacchan with him is forcing him to behave a bit more competitively, wanting to keep up with his own father since he knows the quirk so well.

Beherit I completely agree though, Toga's backstory was phenomenal. Not gonna lie she's kinda always been a favorite of mine since she was introduced so hearing her backstory was awesome.

But Shigiraki's backstory? Whole new damn level, that was intense and really well told. It had me actually not knowing how to feel for the first time in a while.

Both of them were done so well. I totally agree with that. By the end of the season, I was rooting for the league of villains LOL.

Honestly me too lol. They really hyped them up this season and gave us more of a reason to love them.

I am looking to start to watch this actionman007 - March 19, 2022, 3:37 am

I haven't watched it yet.

hajsownicy - April 7, 2022, 8:41 am

Im watching season 5 weekly. Not that hyped about this season to be honest coz things heat up more next season and the one after that.

Zont - June 21, 2022, 3:42 pm

it's dope !!! cant write more , its fantastic
