this is very risky for you. You can contact them and tells them about your talent. If you want to earn lots of money so your hacking talent can prove to be very beneficial for you.

Among the most important conditions for a bounty is not to exploit the vulnerability in any unethical scope. Try to search for the company and whether it is able to pay an acceptable bounty before informing them.

Well, Not that I'm saying I've done big contracts Like this but risk = reward. However Yes Opsec does apply. You Have a few Options here (I don't really condone anything horrible such as Extortion or using ransomware but to each it's own, If you do so nobody will help you).

If it's a hosting company I guess you should start Leasing out cheap VPS Servers. I guess it'll do fine for a while, Slap a ToS There, and shut up about it, Maybe deploy stealers and rats to the rented servers? IDK Make due with what you can, You should be able pull cash or do something worth while.

I'd Avoid anything that'll leave you Exposed. I Recommend Bitrat for the Tor Connection. However, I'd Learn Opsec which I Have good courses to help you if you want. They're free if you want it. All other's it'll be $10 and Posted in the Market if people flood my PMs (Which isn't preferred, Just convo me).

Now that this thread is brought on the top, I wonder what if you did anything with this?

crabby - September 16, 2021, 12:33 pm

Ask for a bounty, reserve your karma and go to the next vulnareability
