Thread: Do you smoke cigarettes?

[(5)] - June 7, 2021, 9:20 pm

I personally find cigarettes disgusting, and the smell repulses me... but I know some still choose to smoke the cancer sticks. Do you smoke cigs? If so, how long have you been smoking? Do you plan to quit, or do you enjoy it?

hazbot77 - June 7, 2021, 9:52 pm

No i don't. To be honest i hate the smell and find the whole thing disgusting and stupid. Smoking is just shortening your life so why do it?

However I know it can be hard for people to quit as it is very addictive.

That's my thoughts too. The smell makes me cringe, and it lingers on clothing/whatever you're smoking by. Plus it makes your teeth yellow. I had smoked when I was a kid, but it was more for the lol and to be cool. It's not something I ever enjoyed.

I agree with you friend. Good choice. I think the younger generations are choosing to smoke less and less cigarettes. But e-cigarette smoking has gone up a bit.

But you know what is funny, cigarette companies fund these "anti-cigarette" ads. Two of them is not good but they try to be the "good" guys here lol

One of the few promises I've managed to keep in my life was to my mom to never smoke a cigarette

I've only taken a puff once of a mint-flavored one, just because someone passed it to me to try it. Honestly, the smell is disgusting and I always hold my breath when walk faster past people that are smoking.

Yea, something along those lines. I'm sure it would work just fine minus the smoking aspect of it. It's just going outside in the fresh air, taking time to myself to breath and think, step away from everything that's on my mind. Smoking is just specific part of the whole process for me at this point.

A + - June 8, 2021, 2:31 am

It's a stupid habit that does nothing for you other than get you addicted to them. Once you're addicted when you don't have them and somebody crosses you you can be a real ornary dude. You're right about the smell, absolutely disgusting. I've been smoking for about 15 years. Last week I went near 72 hours without one, trying hard to quit but it can be a pain in the butt.

A Nobody - June 8, 2021, 4:31 am

No, but I honestly love the smell of cigarettes. I grew up in a home where people smoked inside so it's kind of a comforting smell. It's why I'll never touch one, I think I'd be addicted for sure.

My opinion is that smoking is kind of gross. But once you start smoking, you no longer smell the "cig stank" that they put off. You get used to it. Do you feel that cigs smell like shit now that you've stopped smoking? Or does the smell still attract you? The only smell of a cigarette I can tolerate are the first 5-10 seconds after it's lit.

Yeah that's very cheap. Cigarettes are ridiculously priced in the US. Some states are much lower than others, but man when it's multiple packs people are buying per week sometimes- the difference adds up!

Exactly bro, the tobacco industry is a very reliable machine to make money from human weaknesses. It's terrible if you think that in a dozen or so years a pack of cigarettes will cost more than one barrel of oil and people will buy it anyway (I suspect that there are already places in the world where the price of this drug reaches a similar amount). As you say, regardless of the price of this stimulant, this business will come out its way.

Nope, they're $20 a pack here and you smell lower class for hours afterwards. I also hate coughing while sick, so no way I'd smoke enough to develop smokers cough. I'll have a couple from time to time in good company if the situation allows for a shower and change of clothes shortly after though.

Only when I'm drunk and get offered one.

Jake Johnson - June 8, 2021, 7:42 pm

I don't smoke cigs and have only tried them a few times when I was around others who passed it to me to try. I didn't care for them at all. However, I started vaping in high school and am still vaping to this day which I just graduated college. I did quit for about 7 months without vaping but then for some reason made the decision to return back to it. I know it's not good for me but at least they are better than cigs... at least I hope.

I mean so far every time I have gone to the doctors when they check my lungs they say they are still in very good shape so who knows. I plan on kicking the habit again soon. I wouldn't say I'm addicted to vaping as if I run out and don't have access to get a new disposable I can go days/weeks without vaping and I'm fine. Plus when I did quit the first time I didn't even have any withdrawal symptoms. I guess it is just one of those bad habits I have that is more so something I do when I'm bored.

[REDACTED]

I've smoked but Nicotine seems to not affect me as much? I have a hard time getting addicted to Cigarettes. I haven't smoked in 2 years.

I smoked for over 20 years but I quit last September and haven't had one since.

I smoke cigs, I have really been trying to quit. I did three years in prison, not once did I smoke a roll up. I got out and started hanging out with a few AFABs that smoked and it started all over again. I didn't smoke since 2016 now I smoke about half a pack a day. I keep telling myself I'll stop after this carton, then I'll be with my partner and they'll offer to take me to get another carton. It's become more and more repulsive though, I'll throw away a cigarette that I only half way smoke and just think it's disgusting but still light up a few hours later. It's calming for me, really. Soothes my anxiety. If I'm not around it though, I don't smoke. I live with my dad now that my partner and I broke up and I won't smoke all day but the second I see ex I smoke. I'm a real out of sight out of mind person to begin with, though. So I'm not surprised this is how it happens.

I think a lot of people use smoking as a coping mechanism, especially based off this thread. Unhealthy, but I see that it does help calm people— being able to get away and stop your brain for a few mins while you smoke a cig. Maybe you would be able to find a healthy alternative that still gave you those few moments of peace.

I personally felt like the stress built up from not smoking cigarettes became a way trick myself into thinking that cigarettes were the solution to my stress, when in reality it was an endless vicious cycle. Additionally, we are all gonna have to hit an old age one and nobody wants to be breathing through a pipe, etc. but these things are very common amongst smokers, especially considering that they one average will live 10 years less.

Not hating by any means, I'm just saying this is what made me personally quit.

I feel u, grew up in a household where everybody smoked inside and now even if someone pass by smoking a cigarette it's like "oh I like this smell". As you said it's a comforting smell and I love it.

I smoked for some years, mostly to keep my focus, then quit out of the blue

Personally I hate the feeling of being drunk, I only drink to get a little buzz.

I haven't smoked a cigarette for 3 years coming up in July! I do vape though, it was the only way I could get off the cigs and so glad I did.

I had a pack a day habit for almost a decade. I started smoking when I was 15 years old, and honestly I hated it in the beginning but my friends were doing it and it was the cool thing to do. By the time I was 18 I was fully addicted, almost a pack a day. I literally feel like I have pissed away a chunk of my life just for "smoke breaks." Always having to remove myself from the room, conversation or situation to go and smoke. I was also always thirsty from constantly smoking cigs. I don't have any of those issues with vaping, but I do want to quit eventually and be nicotine free.

Cigarette of choice was: Newport 100s

Astonished - June 11, 2021, 5:51 pm

I personally don't smoke cigarettes often. If I'm offered one by smoker friends I don't turn it down unless I have somewhere to be/someone to meet and want to make a nice impression. I smoke weed much more often in all honesty. However I do have the mindset now where I can easily stop whatever habit without issue, this was a problem for me in the past I shall admit.

Yes, it lessened my stamina. I couldn't keep up with my partner during most rounds of sexual activity which made me feel low and I finally decided to let go of it completely.

So quitting smoking stopped it entirely? No other help needed? That's so interesting, had no idea

I started exercising and much to my relief my stamina has improved and I can go longer. I am not as insecure as I was back then also clean and regulated diet is the key. All is well and I urge everyone through this thread that don't let this come onto you before you know it's too late - quit today and adapt a workout routine.

Yeah it's not worth it. Plus you don't really get anything from it, unless you're addicted- then you get satisfaction of satisfying your addiction.

Where beer or wine actually can cause you an effect.

In the end if you're able to achieve pure happiness and health without being dependent on anything it's really the best thing to do. Plus it will cost you less money too, haha i have smoked cigarettes for years, now i only use them to roll a joint once or twice a day.

currently the world is racist against smokers, you cant smoke anywhere even outside or in front of a building. less and less places are allowing you to smoke.. that made me quit.

I used to smoke. The smell of tobacco is one of the sweetest smells I know. Burned tobacco smells gross though. Now days I smoke cigars occasionally, but never cigarettes.
