Have you tried sour strips? SourStrips.com

I just grabbed some from a local store that began carrying them, and was really impressed. Went back and grabbed more. I feel like there are not many truly sour candies that don't taste like shit or have a bad after taste anymore, and these hit the spot for me. It seems that according to their Instagram... Walmart, Target, and a few other major US retailers are now carrying the candy. I haven't ordered from their site yet but noticed shipping was like $6usd, so might check that out next time I want to try other flavors.

Really thought these were hyped up for no reason, but ended up really liking them. Let me know if you tried them and what you thought.

*I've only tried the Rainbow sour strips, so that's what my opinion would be based on.

I really don't know how it tastes like but my little princess pretty like it so much. She always have it when we are on the grocery store haha

Never heard of them before although their website looks mouth watering haha

They're addicting, but obviously not the healthiest. I usually stray away from sweets, I'm more of a savory/salty kind of person, yet when I tried these I couldn't stop eating them! Lol.

Yes, I thought so too. I really thought it was just a hype company, as some YouTuber owns it I think (?), but it turned out to be good. I see myself trying the other flavors soon.

Do they carry them around in convenience stores or can you only buy them online currently?

Target, Walmart, and a few other stores

I found on their Instagram is where they release this information, and their website has a store locator I think

I think the one you tried is where they used all of them. It looks like rainbow is where all of them are in 1 pack.

The others are just having each one in it's own package. The only places near me is target. Walmart doesn't have it where I have but I looked online and I might buy it online to try it. It looks tasty.

Do you know what youtuber owns the company and do you know where they ship out from?

Yes, rainbow is like a mash up of them all. Or you can purchase them separately, and they keep releasing more new flavors. Their next one is watermelon I think. My target has the Rainbow but not the others.

She's sending from the states though right? Our chocolate is pretty low quality to other countries.

That being said, you can actually eat american chocolate. A delicious Belgian bar of chocolate is great for a single bite but it's so rich that's all you can handle at a time.

That's great, no cavities is for the better I think... Sweets are great but not always for the best of the health and teeth. Especially the sour sweets because of the acid.

You can order it from their website. I ordered the rainbow one. I could have ordered the others.

They will ship it out tonight. I got to talk to the youtuber and learned a lot of what it takes to produce candy. It requires a lot of capital. I myself own a couple of businesses but just was interested in starting a candy and beverage company.

I watched his video about it how candies now and day's suck ass. He was like no one puts effort into the packaging and they just let the candy clump up in a sticky mess. He fixed all of those issues.

I looked further into it and found out he didn't make them. It's a company in Netherlands that their sales dropped so they done a deal with him to rebrand their product.

The original candy is called sour belts. I do not know if they both worked together and tweaked the candy or not because the guy claims that they customized his and they solved the problem where the bag gets stickly. Someone on the youtube done a taste test and they said his sour strips taste exactly the same as sour belts.

here's one youtube video reviewing the candy:

[Video: <https://youtu.be/QihVHvReBB4>]

I never tasted sour belts but I feel that company is using the youtuber to drive sales because it seems their sales have slumped over the years. To be honest I knew sour belts were around but never tried them because thought it was the same kind of candy as sour gummy worms like they all use the same stuff. The sourness is nothing but citric acid crystals. All sour candy has to us them to make it taste sour.

I was hoping they were releasing some good flavor like bomb pop or something for July 4th, but instead it was Watermelon ?? I can't do artificial watermelon candy flavors. Back to the Rainbow flavor for me, lol
