I own it, just released it today.

We provide on-site encryption using AES-256bit, nor do we store any user data.

Please read the following pages for more info:

How it all works: anonarchive.org/document?id=2

What data we collect: <https://anonarchive.org/document?id=1>

as for DMCA and international laws, I don't see a reason to comply as long as you encrypt your data / we cannot know who is storing what (and we have no abuse system ahaha L).

I very much approve of this it looks awesome! Your donation addresses aren't onsite btw, do you intend to add API support?

We are in our MVP release right now (Minimal Viable Product), we want to make sure people actually want a platform like ours before we commit the vast majority of our time to AnonArchive, as I am sure one can understand.

Yeah, I've been meaning to add it ?, API Support is a future plan for when we release out of MVP, we plan to offer archives the ability to use us as a file-cdn of sorts.

Thank you for your support, honestly means the world.

I will be using the site mainly assuming it gets API support :D

It's an interesting idea, serves a purpose. The site itself looks really good and profesional.

Thank you HF com for your support, really means a lot.

I thought you'd be interested in knowing we now have this page: <https://anonarchive.org/code> - as we want to provide more of a service than a community project, we have no immediate plans to open source, so we thought this would be something that could settle a few horns if you will.

Looks nice and refined from what I can see, also love the fact that we have a dark UI from the get-go. 1000MB seems to be a fair amount to start out with too, no complaints there. Noticed "optional directory path" feature could do with a little notice on limits. I'm assuming there has to be a char limit there somewhere for the optional directory path, that may need to be known. Rename Archive/Set Password features may also need this same thing, unsure of that too.

Edit: Also getting a 400 Bad Request about 50% of the time when trying to upload files. My files have also stopped showing when entering my public key to browse them, odd but does seem to be a bug of some sort.

We also plan to set data on char sizes etc very soon, that is a great suggestion thank you.

I was referring to the total storage space allocated to free accounts, the listed 1GB isn't bad for free assuming the text wasn't just placeholder.

Ah, yes, that is our current 100% free to use amount.

We actually plan to have this expand to over 2GB in the following months, it's just that before we make any big commitments to any storage amounts we need to ensure we have that much storage to spare.

Hi what plans do you have to drive up usage to get users?
