Thread: If I gave you \$10,000,000 USD what would you do?

??? - July 5, 2021, 3:13 am

The title says it all if I gave you 10 million dollars, no taxes, and instant delivery.

What would you spend it on? How would it change your life? Do you think you'd spend it properly?

SIM-812607 - July 5, 2021, 3:19 am

I don't know. Give me $10,000,000, and let's find out.

1x 6 Million into real estate, crypto and other investments that I deem worth the risk.

3x 1 Million for family members to divide, split or invest together.

1x 1 Million to spent at my own luxurious lifestyle. Perhaps a new house, perhaps another car.

Who knows? I can only imagine now as I don't make $28k a day just yet haha.

Yanix - July 5, 2021, 3:29 am

3 million dollars would be my savings

2 million dollars for my wife

1 million dollars would be for my 2 kids

2 million dollars for some business

2 million dollars would be distributed for my whole family (mom, aunt and my siblings)

I love this my numbers would be slightly less in myself and more into my family. I would also donate a small portion 1.5% to charity, I plan to donate more as more income comes in. I would just like to give something back as soon I could.

I just realized I never entered what I would do, but I'm going to sleep now so ill edit in the morning.

before anyone says anything 1.5% = $150,000

Not everyone in my family "deserves" (in my opinion) to become rich thanks to a donation.
Some have proven they aren't worth my time, not even speaking about money.

The family members I do love about, will all get a million or at least enough money to pay off their debts for life.

As I'm one of the youngest in my family tree, I think I'd need the money for a new house, investments and such.

Investments will provide my family with enough money to live very well. While I know some would blew that money too fast if I just handed it to them at once.

Good night my man!

Masoom - July 5, 2021, 6:09 am

I'd spend considerable time strategically giving it to people of my community. Keyword: strategically.

I make my own money. so that's surely not going to affect my life. rather, I'd donate them like this.

5 million dollars into African countries.

4 million dollars into Asian countries.

1 million dollars to buy a one-side ticket to Antarctica for all crypto-hating big people so that we can enjoy financial freedom.

Honestly, thank you for your generosity, but I would try to donate this money to others as soon as possible (for example, for some foundation helping people in a difficult situation or some children's hospice). Because money for me has never been a goal or an indicator of fulfillment in my life. Secondly, I have already seen in my life a few examples of people, which a large amount of cash changed beyond recognition. It helped me see that a huge buck is actually a burden that makes you not yourself. I would not like this to happen to me (because I am only human and I know that it could also meet me).

I-I - July 5, 2021, 1:31 pm

I would spend about 60% into real estate, 20% goes to investments such as stocks and the other 20% would go towards opening small profitable businesses.

Immediately invest 5 million into diversified index funds for a lifetime income. Use the rest to buy land and a house, and everything I need to be self sufficient. Land needs a water source and a point of elevation. Electric vehicles, solar paneled roof. Completely off grid.

Sounds like a good plan to me

Get myself settled and buy a nice house. The rest, I would put into crypto, personal use, legitimate Charites, helping family.

Ivex - October 31, 2021, 5:28 pm

Invest $5 million into diversified portfolio.

Invest $1 million into my current business (more than that would operationally be too much too fast)

Give away $3 million to family.

Spend $1 million on a dream home.

Bench Press - October 31, 2021, 7:42 pm

I would put that on Green in roulette brother.

1mill into crypto and another 1-2mill into the stock market.

5mill into savings.

And the remaining 2-3mill would just be to live off of as my investments start bringing in more passive income.

I would invest some of it into a business which would profit enough for me to get by without dipping into the fortune, then I would start another business for bigger profits, and invest maybe a million into crypto n stocks, I would put away savings for my children and their children, I would probably move out of America or at least have residency in another country or two. I would put a lot of money into my children and grandchildren education as well... And I'd love to help other people out in need as well.

Take 1/2, put it away for family generational wealth. Then I'd pay off what little debt I have. Then do the same for the people who've stuck by my side through thick and thin.

Whatever is left after all that, 1/2 would be saved in a compound interest account. The other 1/2 would just to live.

You could set up an account to pay yourself weekly. That'd be a good way to make sure you didn't get any crazy urges.

I'd invest it very meticulously into generating small sub-systems that allow for repeat broadcast messages to those who are less fortunate and provide a set of renewable tools for them to help themselves and provide the immediate assistance they need (such as minor education on the current economical systems, businesses, water, food, shelter and some human interaction that doesn't revolve around time wasting and self-destructive behaviors such as drug use).

Although that would require time as I'd have to research known attempts and techniques of such inadequate systems and the lesser used, but far more effective systems that have been implemented since the 1970s both in the USA and in European countries such as Sweden or Finland.

As I wrote in my GED essay in 2010: "There's nothing you can do in life that doesn't directly or indirectly help you; no matter how hard you try."

No matter how the money is spent: You will inevitably help yourself inadvertently or intentionally.

To try and describe how you would compare, weigh, measure or otherwise gauge the significance of 'properly' is more complex of a task than to map out all of the stars in existence.

How does one say that helping the rich, wealthy and healthy is more or less proper than helping the poor, unwealthy and unhealthy? What are the predicates? How are they determined?

I'd honestly probably go travel around for a bit, then come back and buy a crib somewhere and pay off my student loans.

I'm happy enough to get a job in a field that interests me, so I'd be able to spend time without worrying about having income to find a job I like and just chill being casually rich.
