Sometimes, within shows or movies, you have an actor that physically really fits a certain role. Their face just matches up with the type of character they are playing. In this case I'm mainly referring to those who are often the "bad guys".

So this is my example, Alex Jennings from The Crown, playing Edward VIII. The arrogance can be seen in his face. You can just hate him by looking at him. It's an amazing casting skill.

Another great example is the Pink Lady from Harry Potter.

not many appreciate the work a casting director puts in for a movie.
