Thread: I bought a new gaming chair, from Secret Labs

Bankrupt - September 20, 2021, 4:17 pm

I bought a brand new TITAN Secret Labs chair on sale for 550$, thinking it was way over priced and over hyped from streamers and a few of my close friends, but holy SHIT did they really find a way to outshine regular old chairs. When i put this chair together the instructions were easy to follow and ALL the hardware, moving parts, and fabric is of some of the HIGHEST quality ive ever seen in my life. Like im shocked. Even the tools that came with were branded Secret Labs and the screwdriver had a magnet inside of it to hold the bits properly, like you would see on high quality tools. Not one complaint from me, thought id share my experience.. 10/10 would actually buy again (not endorsed.)

even some of the parts were color coded for ease of instructions.

I chose the Ahri design from League of Legends, mainly because I liked the aesthetic, and when i do play league i play mid lane.

Heres there catalogue here <https://secretlabchairs.ca/collections/all?model=titan> what would you pick for a design? Is there any other chairs out there that compete with this elite build?

How is the comfortability? IMO that's the most important part. I've found that office chairs, from my experience, tend to be more comfortable then gaming chairs.

the idea is only needing 1 chair for 10 years, one that wont hurt your back meh, office chairs are way better then those ones that are marketed for "gaming" but as long as you like it then i suppose its money well spent

UnknownPooh - September 20, 2021, 7:39 pm

I have seen tons of people on twitch using these chairs and am extremely considering getting one for myself.

Ke$h - September 20, 2021, 9:43 pm

The chair looks awesome but the office man, nice minimal setup you have there. Mine is a writers den, coffee and stuff everywhere.

Any tips?

On the scale of comfortable and ergonomic, what would you rate it? Out of 10.

HEISENPUG - September 20, 2021, 9:44 pm

I keep my office space fairly clean as i use it mostly for gaming and dont find myself fidgeting with things often

I got my chair from office depot for like $100 bucks. It's one of their own brands, feels nice, and does the job.

A previous employer where I interned had a few of these chairs. They were the best office chairs I've ever sat in.

I'm looking to get an Aeron V2 for my home office now. My IKEA chair isn't the most ergonomic thing, but I think it's better for just laying back in and watching a bit of YouTube. So I'm contemplating what I should do. I should probably just visit a store where they sell these though and try it out again.

I don't want to poopoo your new purchase, but I had a secret lab titan and the build quality was straight trash, the armrests kept breaking so I had to keep getting them replaced.

Ended up buying the Logitech x Herman Miller Embody and never looked back, best chair I've ever sat in!

It's not a gaming chair, they just partnered with logitech to make a 'gaming' version which just includes optional extras from the original as standard as well as copper flakes in the foam to aid cooling.

I've sat in an Aeron and it doesn't compare to embody imo.

I have one of these, the Houst of Stark (Omega) from SecretLabs

I bought a Secret Lab chair few months back and its been the best decision. So comfortable. I came from a DX Racer, HUGE UPGRADE!

False King - September 21, 2021, 2:29 pm

Been watching them for a few years, and definitely going to buy one of them when my current one expires. They are awesome. A colleague has one too, and nothing but praise.

webdev77 - September 21, 2021, 2:44 pm

The Herman Miller Aerons are fine. I would also rather have a Steelcase Leap v2 or Gesture over a gaming chair.

Envy - September 21, 2021, 3:09 pm

I spent $100 on a "gaming" chair and have another one that retails at $699.99 3 feet away from me

They both seat the same, provide the same (lumbar support, neck support, arm rests) and the only thing that varies is texture of the cover of the chair and obviously the design.

Even SecretLabs chairs are just reskins, slap some fancy embroidery and make the cover suede. 99% of the time they are changing the design of the actual fabric but never the design of the chair.

Yes, it's nice to buy boujee things but some of these $600+ chairs are so unnecessary and overly priced.

I'm sure in general the seating change from your old (in the picture, I'm assuming leather one is old) to the new is night and day, I don't regret buying a new chair... posture, comfortability.

I have a nice mesh one I bought, but I also don't sit in it for more then a few hours at a time, if someone is spending 8+ hours they should be dishing the cash out for a proper one. These gaming chairs are not worth nearly the money they charge for them

H??????a X™ - September 21, 2021, 4:54 pm

I have been on and off on buying one of these, mainly because of the price tag. But I see they do have payment plans to make it more affordable than just dropping 600+ on a chair at once. Will keep looking into them more, so it's nice to see threads like this to give me more information before deciding if I want to purchase. I really like the design of the one you got, was the one I was looking at as well.

Wafflemonger - September 21, 2021, 7:50 pm

The gaming chairs require you to consciously put yourself in proper posture. If you don't have that willpower or drive to do it, they are absolutely horrible. You need to constantly adjust the back of the chair depending on the position of your back. For example, gaming the back of the chair is a bit further back, whereas for day to day work it's a bit more forward.

Plus, you should have the base of the chair tilted slightly forward so that the circulation to your legs isn't cut off. Also having a foot rest of any sort is required. Also I found that I was getting some pinched nerves with the hard arm rests, but $15 memory foam covers solved that. Overall, it's not 100% perfect, but it isn't uncomfortable by any means with proper adjustments and additions.

EDIT: Also, you should constantly adjust the arm rests as well depending on your task, otherwise you will suffer from forearm pains. Proper posture checks with those chairs are mandatory.

Give it a month and you will get used to the hardness. That also being said I also had the same thoughts as you when I bought the same chair (just different design) as your original post regarding quality however after 8ish months the chair starting falling apart and I had to purchase a new chair and went with a Herman Miller Aeron and man will I say its 50x better although much more expensive.

The secret lab chair foam all started coming off from the armrests and eventually the back part that bends forward and back where the screw goes into the plastic warped and broke basically causing the back part of the chair to detach from the base.

When i put this chair together the instructions were easy to follow and ALL the hardware, moving parts, and fabric is of some of the HIGHEST quality ive ever seen in my life. Like im shocked. Even the tools that came with were branded Secret Labs and the screwdriver had a magnet inside of it to hold the bits properly, like you would see on high quality tools. Not one complaint from me, thought id share my experience.. 10/10 would actually buy again (not endorsed.)

even some of the parts were color coded for ease of instructions.

I chose the Ahri design from League of Legends, mainly because I liked the aesthetic, and when i do play league i play mid lane.

Think about the sheer number of hours you spend in it.

I don't think it's about cheap or expensive in the traditional sense. If you spend 1 hour every 2 years in it, maybe it's expensive. But if you spend 10 hours a day in it, for 10 years, then I think it's cheap right?

Same for your bed, your car, and your shoes. :)

I thought about buying a gaming chair, because I broke two "normal" chairs in 1 year, but it's pretty expensive ...

However I found a wheel chair in my home, and to be honest it works perfectly, really comfortable and also large. Have a footrest attached on the chair, can move my chair without putting my feet on the ground. The backrest can be tilted when I watch movies or series.

My friends often say that I'll be cursed to use a wheel chair as I'm not disabled lmao, but this wheel chair is gold to be honest

Owning a gaming chair is kind of like sitting in your car seat, it's nice at first, but after 8-12 hours it isn't anymore.

The main thing your paying for is all the options like moving the back up and down, tilt, etc.

I've heard good things about herman miller but haven't forked over 1K for a chair.

Seeing ads from their on FB and IG all the time.

Want one of those chairs so bad.

Sadly out of my budget (Like... way out of my budget)

Where are the pics of the chair op

Ninja - October 31, 2021, 1:54 pm

I bought a gaming chair at the end of 2019 and it's already breaking apart. I would buy a more expensive one next time.

I got a GTRacing chair and it is pretty comfy.

isai - November 2, 2021, 3:44 pm

that's a nice gaming chair, it should make your aim better also

Lyrice - November 2, 2021, 4:11 pm

I've got one, and I think it fucking sucks. So uncomfortable for me.

Same and I agree, will be looking to get a Herman Miller Embody for my next one.

hey looks like pretty nice i will maybe try it later

funtela - November 2, 2021, 4:37 pm

That chair looks like a box of tools

Jk congrats OP I hope you like it!
