Thread: Do you want to be a parent?

False King - September 27, 2021, 7:53 am

So I'm quite curious what people think about this. Especially with the group of people who don't want kids growing every year. I know some users here already have kids, and please, feel free to contribute too.

As for me, I for sure want to have kids. This thread actually popped up in my head when I saw a mom pass on the streets today, with 2 kids in the cargo bike, just simply waving all around them with smiles on their faces. I can't imagine the things I would miss out on if I wouldn't have kids.

Preferably I'd have 2 boys, or with the oldest being a boy. I think I'd be way too defensive if I had daughters. Not that I would be any less happy to have daughters.

Justin - September 27, 2021, 7:56 am

I sure want kids one day, but I feel like I want to do so much more before I have a kid or two.

My parents made me when they were 27, respectively 30. Not a bad age, but they were not rich and whenever they travelled somewhere, they took the baby with them and stuff like that.

That's not really my thing. I'm only 21 now, but still, I feel like I have so many more things to experience with my gf as a couple. Lowkey it would be cool to have a kid at age 23-24, since you are a very young parent and it's cool, but idk, not for me.

Doctor. - September 27, 2021, 8:57 am

Yes of course! I want to have many offspring, perhaps even a dozen!

Yeah but that's more about the parents than the kids themselves

I would like to have 1-2 kids and me and my girl are thinking about it, she's ready, I'm still a little nervous, maybe because it will be me admitting to myself that I'm not a kid myself anymore

That's a solid yes, already got a 7mo boy tho who's gonna be a big (tall) boy, at least according to all charts n shit. Want a 2nd kid too tho so that they are never alone. As you said, I would also be way too defensive and protective if it would have been a girl. That being said, I also do respect those who don't want kids. The world is slowly going to hell so why bring more people in to the world...right... The way I see that is that I at least try to push for a change in the right direction with all this "go green" stuff. Building a house soon-ish and I plan to produce enough electricity to share with at least one or two neighbors just because I can (and also because it costs like almost 0.28€/kWh here).

Bastille - September 27, 2021, 12:02 pm

Don't want kids, don't see any form of interest. Don't even have enough time for me so how I would be able to give them the time and the attention they need.

Often annoyed by my friends because I'm single and "they feel sad and sorry" for me because I'm alone ? My father also often talk to me about being married, and having kids.

When I go back to home after the office, I just do what I want to do, and that's how I'm feeling good ?

I liked itThat's not a bad thing, as long as your happy, I think my main worries is 1. I like the freedom I have now and 2. It's a lot of responsibility having kids and I would be nervous I wouldn't be a good parent and fuck the kid up somehow. I feel a lot of people these days are leaning to the no kids life which will be great for the environment

Eventually...

I don't know when that will be though.

I can honestly say no I don't want any children. Not much longer left in my 20s either. Same with marriage too, I can't ever see myself getting married. Kids and marriage involves a lot of trust in someone, they end up being a shitty person or a total wackjob you're fucked.

reb666 - September 27, 2021, 10:38 pm

I would actually like to have kids and I think I'd do a good parent but as I'm completely mentally unstable due to severe traumas during my child and teen ages I made the choice to do a vasectomy. So now I'm sure that I won't have kids and if someday I really want to then It'll be the day I'm sure to have kids and I'll then adopt :)

Take care of you well being before having kids, I know that a lot of my daily messed up thoughts are due to my parents education. Don't mess with other people lives until you know how to be a good person to them. <3

I can say that it's mostly nice to have a kiddo, except for when he wants breast milk while mommy is working...that's pure pain, he doesn't lake the substitute milk anymore - ____ - most of the parent's doesn't want their kids to grow because kids when grow up will not be same as they were to their parents when they grownup and the adults priorities keeps on changing from time to time.

That's the way life goes bro the kids just need parent's guidance and never get tired to tell them what is right and what is wrong.

So ten years ago I would've told you no. I was adamant I wouldn't have a child. Meeting and marrying my wife didn't change that, even. But in time, something changed. Fast forward to today, and I have an eight year old.

Hello, False King.

I assure you: When you have your first child: Your entire perspective of the world will change in the matter of a moment of time. It is unexplainable. You probably won't care if you and your spouse have a boy or a girl. You will only see your child and swell with an emotion that you cannot describe, even years to come.

I will be very sad if you don't and probably won't ever talk to you again..... For like 5 minutes after that day..... Then I'll just ask for some pictures. ?

Someday i would like to have a family. I'm 24 right now and there is no way i could imagine raising a child, i can barley take care of myself :p

As for me, I for sure want to have kids. This thread actually popped up in my head when I saw a mom pass on the streets today, with 2 kids in the cargo bike, just simply waving all around them with smiles on their faces. I can't imagine the things I would miss out on if I wouldn't have kids.

Preferably I'd have 2 boys, or with the oldest being a boy. I think I'd be way too defensive if I had daughters. Not that I would be any less happy to have daughters.

In my culture that shows how responsible you are and orderly you have your life together and I don't mean having kids and be a fugged dad nah. I have 3 and I'm proud if that.
