Straight to it.

Would you ever run for president if you had the opportunity, and why?

This should be fun:)

No. Asking for nothing but stress, ulcers, heart issues, and increased aging. Got to be a sociopath to want that job. I prefer to retire in peace, not have to deal with all that BS.

Prettykitty - October 5, 2021, 1:32 pm

Probably not as I don't live in the US. It'd be the equivalent of a prime minister here which I wouldn't be interested. Politics don't really sound like a thing for me since it doesn't solve many problems as science and technology does.

Anyhow, you and I know it won't end up that way though. It'll be the US Citizens who pay for it, just the way it works. This man still has 3ish years in office...

Nah, running for President is something I'll never do. I wouldn't want the attention, the responsibility, or the incredible stress that comes with it. It's something that never interested me as a young kid either. I remember a few select kids in Elementary school who wanted to become President when they grow up. One of them was so obsessed he had every President's name memorized by age 6 and would talk about past Presidents all the time. He ended up becoming a movie director later in life hah.

Oh hell no. Being the perceived point person for a government as messed up and politically divisive as ours? There's not a dollar amount in the world large enough to convince me to do that. Our politics are so wildly partisan that there's no pleasing the masses any longer. While this goes on I firmly believe we'll be plagued by presidents with horrific approval ratings. Because right now you either please your party, or you please no one at all.

If that were the requirements, then ye of course. If that means I have a chance to turn people's life into something with more potential, then sure.

Sadly, politics is all just a game for power, so instead of focussing on the people, they focus on getting more power. So even though I were the president, there would be a lot of other people who would try to step on my toes.
