Neither, I prefer good whiskey. Not a fan of that sissy stuff.

Grim - October 6, 2021, 4:36 pm spirit much better imo. really a preference once im drunk enough i drink anything anyone hands me

edit: RIP your gold egg brother

False King - October 6, 2021, 4:38 pm

I'm into hard liquor in general. A good whiskey, cognac, gin, or spiced rum. As long as it has a strong and outspoken taste. Certain craft beers a very good too.

Spirits such as vodka are my least favorite.

shakur123 - October 6, 2021, 4:38 pm

Vodka for my, cognac seems a little too much for me

Cognacs are extremely strong. They will mess you up if you don't be careful. Spirits are the safest thing you start with for someone now starting out.

I could be wrong. It can just be me.

Absolut, Skyy and UV are what you would call "low quality and cheap vodka." There are other brands, but they cost much more than $10 USD - $15 USD.

Everclear (surprisingly) is cheap, but you can use it to create your own drink with essentially no after taste or bite from it.

Everclear ranges from 30% ABV (60 proof) up to 95% ABV (190 proof). A lot of countries globally out right ban alcoholic beverages in that content level.

In the USA: Most states ban alcoholic beverages above 40% and especially 95% ABV beverages. Texas is one of a few where you can legally purchase it (normally between $20 USD - $40 USD for a 750ml). They do sell them in much larger (glass) containers.

If you decide to buy Everclear: Please don't laugh at the label and consume too much. You will quite literally accidentally kill yourself (95% ABV). One too many shots is one way. Not measuring your drinks is another.

0.35%+ BAC isn't exactly fun. Your heart stings like a knife is inside of it and you start to taste nothing but alcohol and feel as if someone is suffocating you no matter how much you try to inhale. Trying to move around or even drink water just causes you to vomit profusely very soon after and you start to black in and out with no sense of time. Your vision's beyond blurry, distorted and you see all sorts of colors. Your motor skills become so impaired that even sitting up right becomes a monumental task; asking for help if you are by yourself at that point isn't easy. Your thoughts will vary, especially as you realize you are dying and that it's alcohol and nobody could help even if they wanted to.

There is more, but I hope that tells you to take the "drink responsibly" warning labels as serious.

Oh! Also: 95% ABV (Everclear or Tomahawk) will both catch on fire super easy from a cigarette lighter. You can set any drink on fire and drink it.

Oh! Also: 95% ABV (Everclear or Tomahawk) will both catch on fire super easy from a cigarette lighter. You can set any drink on fire and drink it.

What are you drinking right now, I'm getting tipsy my man hahahah

I genuinely cannot understand how people can actually like alcoholic drinks. When I drink it's literally just to loosen up or get drunk so I just stick with vodka. I do regularly hear that I just haven't found "my" drink yet so we'll see.

I tried Jack Daniels once, was fine for a while until I had to puke, now even if just one drop of it touches my tongue I have to puke.

I really enjoy a good whisky or a good rum

I mixed rum and coke the last time I tried with friends, it didn't go well with my system.

In the winter months I usually go whiskey or beer. In the summer months my go to is vodka sprite and a lime or beer. I occasionally mix in rum but I mostly stick to whiskey and vodka.

Unpopular opinion, but I agree. I was a booze hound for years, and all of it tastes awful, I just liked what it did to my brain. Tried to avoid spirits so that I didn't die, but I went through a period of drinking Johnny Walker with perrier water, that's about as classy as I ever got.

Hmmm Johnny walker is a nice brand I think I tasted it some years back during the winter season chilling in the cold with friends and it went well. Never tried it since then again.

Try it with perrier water before lunch or dinner. It's a thing, so I understand.
