Thread: Would you live on Mars?

device - October 21, 2021, 9:13 am

We've seen with the Mars One project that a lot of people wanted to go live on Mars.

Is that something you would do if it was offered to you?

Lindros - October 21, 2021, 9:28 am

Probably not. I'd rather live in a remote area here on Earth than on Mars. What would there even be to do up there? I feel like the accommodations wouldn't be as nice as the sci-fi movies, at least with these first colonizing missions. I'm also thinking the first mission will also have some high risk to it.

Would you?

In?sane? - October 21, 2021, 9:38 am

God no, won't be a very nice place to live for a good while.

Right, no I wouldn't either to be honest.

TB12 - October 21, 2021, 9:40 am

I wouldn't want to live there but I would love to visit

Yeah I don't think it would be worth it. I'd rather get paid a bunch of money to stay in one of those research facilities out in the Antarctic over the winter or something. At least I'm still on the Earth.

Yin Yang - October 21, 2021, 9:42 am

Yes I'll build a potato farm like Matt Damon

Juoku - October 21, 2021, 9:46 am

It'll probably be like buying a new tech product, it has potential to become awesome, but if you'll be one of the first to buy it you'll probably have only 1 or 2 functions available while if you wait a year you'll have tons.

I wouldn't want to be first on Mars, I'd probably go there after a decade or so when I know there are jobs and stuff to do and that it's alright to live there

I would visit Mars but I don't think I would live on it. I feel that there will be too many complications that would go into living on Mars, for example, everything would have to be built for Mars and evolution would have to play a big part on if we can stand outside without any complications.

Exactly my thoughts, if you get bored one place, there is always the option to move somewhere else, if someone can afford to travel to Mars I'm sure he'll find a way to travel the world :P

A the grass is always greener on the other side scenario, many people might say they want to go but once you find yourself on a rock very hostile to life living in the same small space with the same people as you get assblasted by radiation and probably develop all kinds of cancers you might have second guesses. It will be reserved to a very small minority of high IQ nut jobs who will be able to handle an extreme life of solitude and constant hardships without losing their shit, the culture and politics developing there will be interesting to see.

Im mainly saying that we (maybe you are doing your part, if so this isnt about you) arent taking care of earth. But yeah there is not enough information or studies for us to even stay there. agree with this though.

Ohh I see what you are saying. It's not an issue on the individual plane, it's mainly murica and china responsible for that. Also it's not as bad as the news make it out to be, yes destroying nature, ocean, life, coral reefs and rainforest etc is horrible but the Earth is a lot stronger than you think and we are not going under from anything enviromental in our lifetimes if ever at all.

Never, lol. If we were to find a second earth I'd be down to go see it and maybe live there, if all my close people would come with me. Other than that: No. How about you?

If I could have Internet access, get stuff delivered to me, my music gear and my family with me, I wouldn't mind tbh.

I wouldn't want to go, but I could still be happy with these conditions.

But you would have to worry about such a lot of things, I mean you cannot even breathe normally. Do you really think you could be happy under these conditions? I mean better than being alone on earth and having your whole friends and family on mars, that is a fact lol

Being alone in a desert canyon singing the blues doesn't seem like too bad of an image to me. Now forever is something else ?

Lol yeah I can imagine that being fun. But as you said, I don't like the part of being there for life. If science keeps evolving like that I might visit it in the future though, but only for a few days or so.

We've already found some if I recall well, but they are light years away. Wasn't one of them Titan? Visiting other planets would be such a cool thing to do.

I am not too sure about that, just saw a documentary about some of them, but most of them eventually turned out to be uninhabitable for humans. I find that topic super interesting though. Do you think that if humanity keeps going like that, we will actually need a second earth in the future?
