burp is slow and when getting to know and learn while doing the process acunetix is perfect for beginners this is why its commercially advertised bigger than burp for example to the rest of the easy to use with same features as burp netsparker etc

Here's a link to my thread...

Outlines a really good tool but does sometimes throw out false positives so will still need to test manually.

So you are asking several things here. If you're searching for a framework for security testing on websites (but not only), an easy tool to use would be golismero. However, depending on the website, if you do a full scan, it could take a few hours to complete the report for you get private code, hire freelancers to do it apart from that you can use lots of public tools sqlmap must be the major one
