e-Radix (EXRD)

Radix (XRD)

price now: $0.194027

All-Time High: $0.196120

Anyone still holding after full unlock panic episode?

SIM-1866423 - November 5, 2021, 4:44 am

If i am not wrong omni banned all radix related topics on this forum so .. yea good pump because of coinbase custody but never jump into green candles.

TheMTGuy - November 5, 2021, 4:56 am

Probably going to stay around that price chart until later developments in the project.

Price will always pump a bit with releases on big broker website.

Lyrlei - November 5, 2021, 5:06 am

I'm still holding mine, and I think many others too since they couldn't sell, which was the reason for the outrage in the first place.

Yeah he did unfortunately. Hopefully one day he'll revoke the ban. Radix was a lot of my involvement on HF for a while, now I have to use other sites/apps.

Rayner - November 5, 2021, 5:39 am

Still holding onto my bag. Nice growth, potential for more.

Honestly, I don't mind the new tokenomics but I understand why people would be upset seeing as they went against their whitepaper.

Omniscient - November 5, 2021, 9:28 am

Meh. Ban lifted. Still I am bitter but happy to see movement finally. I still have my bag because I had no way to sell it anyways. Wasn't even a choice for me. Plan is still the same, which is to wait for the development to finish off and hope that it hits $1+ in 2022 or 2023. IMHO it can still go much higher though.

Staking rewards have been strong. Past month maybe 4k XRD which is now valued at $850 about. So making $200 a week or more in rewards is what I was hoping for. Radix can still be my retirement bag.

It would be impossible unless someone had about 8m XRD they would be willing to commit to staking.

I'd like to know when Radix is going to build that bridge back to eXRD.

Also since a community vote allowed for the unlocking. Maybe we should encourage a new community vote to force the Radix Team to burn a huge portion of their unlocked tokens and lower supply even more.

Radix sat for a couple months under 15 cents. Often hitting 11-12 cents. You could have bought into Radix at any time. Not sure you want to wait till .15 again in these market conditions. Nov-Jan most of the market is gonna rally. I've been saying that since earlier in the year. This is where BTC pushes 80-100k, ETH pops into $7k range, and a lot of hype goes flying around to projects. I think overall market cap is gonna bust 50% or more within 3 months to $4T+.

IMHO the magic number is when Bitcoin hits $10T cap that it becomes mainstream globally.

SUI-3183372 - November 5, 2021, 11:34 am

I think you should consider a percentage buy. Example if you have $1000 you plan on investing maybe buy 25% now and spend $250. If it goes up, you have something, if it goes down you can DCA.

I really think that waiting for a .15 is the riskier move in this market.

The XRD unlock was the biggest unknown. That has passed. Market didn't react heavily and XRD remained stable .10-.13. Now it's pumped.

Still incredibly early for XRD. Only one exchange for actual XRD (Bitfinex) and so much of their development is still being worked on. Will it take them a year or five?

All the people who invested in Radix expecting short-term results are going to be let down. All the people willing to wait a couple years imho are going to be heavily rewarded.

Just keep in mind that if you do make this swap, and you are an American, you're effectively trapping yourself. We still have no sign of a XRD->eXRD bridge coming out and trade volume is generally always low enough that even a $25,000 trade can cause prices to swing by a couple of cents. This is still a very volatile coin and a whale exiting can decimate price gains pretty easily.

Is it worth the risk? Up until a few weeks ago I would have told you no, but we weathered the unlocking far better than I could have imagined and I'm fairly optimistic about things again. The stake rewards are a bit depressing compared to what we were anticipating before all the unlocking shenanigans, but ~12% still isn't anything to be upset about, that's a very solid return.

Do you really think it's just because of coinbase custody? I had no idea what coinbase custody was before Radix was listed on there, but it seems like it's just a glorified wallet which already has a shit load of assets supported? I also find it funny that the ERC20 token got listed when theres already been a mainnet launch for Radix months ago.

If you're from the US, just remember there's no way to sell your native XRD until the API refactor is complete and exchanges like Kucoin etc. finally add XRD.

If you plan to hold for a few years then I would absolutely recommend swapping to XRD and staking straight away.

Cameron - November 6, 2021, 2:54 am

(Nov 6, 2021 02:27 AM)Patrick Jane Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Any reason in particular to splitting between different nodes?

Yep. For example if you staked to a node which dropped out of the top 100, you would lose all rewards for at least 2 weeks until your unstaking completed. This is unfortunately what happened to the HF node. Myself and many others had 100% staked there. Obviously you would only lose 20% of your rewards for 2 weeks if you split between 5 nodes.

Also helps with network decentralisation.

Quote:Also helps with network decentralisation.

I consider 100 nodes mostly run by the OG's to be fairly centralized. It's $2m value minimum to have a Validator node in top 10. Only the early investors have that much XRD now. Yes, a whale could potentially buy enough to get a node. Maybe even a few whales. But the vast majority of those 100 go along with the grain and if don't, then you get pushed out like our node did. Yeah, still bitter, gonna be that way when you take serious money out of my pocket.

Quote:I am thinking to buy some.

Well it's a toss up. The XRD is the native token that you can stake. You can't stake eXRD. But eXRD is easier to get and also to sell. eXRD on swap sites might have high ETH fees too. I'd go with XRD if you have a Bitfinex account or someone is willing to sell some to you.

btw, price up to .28 today. This is a great price movement.

EDIT: Also between XRD and eXRD there is $33m in trade volume. I'm actually surprised we haven't moved higher based on that much volume.

True, but that's assuming the market cap of current top 10 will stay the same in a few years.

Personally, I'm going to sell half if Radix reaches $1 this year, and holding the rest for 5 years.

The controversy was mostly about the unlock that happened in September. Long story short, yes it's safe to buy and a legit project. The only thing is if you can't use Bitfinex, then don't convert to XRD via Instabridge if you want to sell as the XRD->eXRD bridge isn't done yet afaik.

Correct.

Hopefully the API refactor is done soon so XRD can be on the likes of Kucoin. Until such time it's holding a lot of potential US investors back. IMO this really needs to be a priority for the team.

I'd then likely stake the rest until close to $10 AUD and that would leave us very nicely set up for the future.

Worth transferring it to Radix wallet if you plan on holding long-term. Staking is really easy on the desktop wallet as well so you shouldn't have trouble beginning your stake.

Yes you have the token which cannot be staked or sent to the radix wallet, it's only for holding. You can stake by getting the native XRD token either by converting your EXRD via Instapass or by buying it on Bitfinex. Just send XRD to your wallet and choose a few validators. Only the top 100 validators receive rewards.

I don't know enough about the crypto market as a whole to make an accurate prediction, but based on how many XRD coins are available, I don't think it'll go to that price anytime soon, if ever.

Looking at its current value, in roughly 7 months Solana was able to obtain a $75 billion dollar marketcap.

Using rough numbers, that's about 19x Radix's current marketcap, and Radix should be just as capable as Solana and more, so lets assume Radix will reach Sol's current levels. That puts us at a $8.60 Radix.

I also anticipate that we're rapidly approaching a $4T overall marketcap. Lets say we're at $3T right now for simplicity's sake, and lets say that all coins benefit equally from our climb from $3T -> $4T. That should put Radix in the $11.45 range (assuming we've already hit that meteoric rise to Sol's mcap).

That $1,250 that one of you may have dropped on 10,000 XRD a few months ago would then be worth $114,500. A cool profit of $113,250.

Of course this assumes two largely positive events take place. That while the overall crypto marketcap climbs to $4T we simultaneously see Radix break out massively. I just wanted a nice dose of optimism to start my morning.

But when we calculate around Market caps we are calculating like if it was today it would rise to those levels. In 5-10 years. Crypto market cap is probably way over $10T+ and then a $20-30 radix would be possible. Like $300K BTC is possible. $50K ETH. the overall market cap of crypto in general is gonna be x10 from now in 10-15 years. Thats my guess.

I don't think we're back in a spot where we necessarily want to show the Radix Foundation our support, they still acted unfavorably.

However, the Radix award was a nice symbol of the community working together to achieve a common goal (the group buy), so an award for that, even if not the Radix award itsself, seems suitable.

Quote:I worry that new investors are looking at this as a quick 10x when they're looking at the CMC

Hopefully this is not the cause of the pump by that much.

I really don't care if these new investors expect a 10x. My guess is that the market enthusiasm just might make that happen. This is the start of a bull run and I'm tired of seeing my investments do mediocre when some shitcoin is mooning. Maybe it's finally my turn to get that one big win I need.

If anything comes out of this pump I hope it's XRD listed on more exchanges. I need this so bad. I can't even sell $10 worth right now.

I just thought of something. This pump might actually be exchanges getting enough XRD for liquidity. Is that plausible?

Quote:Who knows though, $100 could potentially be done one day.

Nah. The market cap would be too high. That's very unrealistic imho. I think if Radix ever hit $10 it would be in top 5. That might give you perspective.

Quote:but does 100B bring the radix price to 80-100$? am bad with maths

$100B is #3 (Binance) right now.

<https://learn.radixdlt.com/article/start-here-radix-tokens-and-tokenomics>

So it's 24b total max supply with probably about 9.6bn in circulation. A $1 XRD means $10b value which is #25 on the cap list. Obtainable I suppose given the rise of Cardano, Polygon, Polkadot, Chainlink, Avalanche and Solana.

I don't think CMC or Coingecko are correctly reporting the market cap though. eXRD shows as 4.4bln supply when in-fact after the unlocking it is now 9.6b. They have yet to adjust their numbers since the unlocking. Not sure why someone from Radix has not contacted them.

FYI, .45 price now. That's a 400% increase from 1 week ago. That's going to get a lot of attention. We very well might push past $1 simply out of FOMO.

Quote:Not really. More like 20-40 is possible in the next 5 years per coin.

A $20 XRD is insane and as mentioned above, the tokenomics make that really impossible.

Quote:Using rough numbers, that's about 19x Radix's current marketcap, and Radix should be just as capable as Solana and more, so lets assume Radix will reach Sol's current levels. That puts us at a $8.60 Radix.

I think realistically a $10 XRD one day is plausible.

Yes, more realistic is years away these types of caps are possible. That's if Radix wins, finishes development, and isn't replaced by something better.

Quote:I wonder if Omni will also consider "unbanning" the radix award too, Award was deleted. I will not be adding it again. That unlocking cost me a LOT of money. Radix was going to do these numbers eventually with or without the unlocking imho. All the unlocking did was enrich the early investors who took control over the staking nodes and reaped huge profits at the expense of newer investors. I'm easily out tens of thousands of dollars and the loss only gets larger the more successful XRD is. A real catch-22. That's not to say I'm unhappy that indeed my investment is paying off. But I had some long-term dev plans with this project which are now gone.

Yep, I still consider my XRD a loss for the time being. These gains are nice on paper, but will they be here in 2 weeks if I were to unstake? And even then... how much longer would I need organizing private sales to offload my Radix?

Americans are certainly still trapped and we're far from being on stable ground again. As nice as these gains are, as nice as a little optimism is in this space, I won't let myself become convinced that I'm still not utterly screwed in the position I'm currently in.

Americans are certainly still trapped are we're far from being on stable ground again. As nice as these gains are, as nice as a little optimism is in this space, I won't let myself become convinced that I'm still not utterly screwed in the position I'm currently in.

I know. It's just paper gains right now. I'm thinking the exact same thing. I can unstake some now, then either look for a private trade or pray that an exchange picks up XRD.

This is some unforeseen bullshit from Radix team. It's poor planning.

On one hand I'm trapped but on the other I wonder what happens when XRD does get into exchanges and a real trading market opens up. How many people right now want Radix but aren't able to get it?

And i forgot to mention bitfinex are dicks to get KYC'd at. Because they want 2 Photo ID's to be KYC'd but in denmark we only have 2 Photo id's and thats passport and driver license and alot of people don't have their license like my girlfriend. SO people use uniswap to get EXRD. and the fees are so incredible high alot of the people who want to invest smaller amounts like $100-500 are finding something else to put their money into.

So it's 24b total max supply with probably about 9.6bn in circulation. A $1 XRD means $10b value which is #25 on the cap list. Obtainable I suppose given the rise of Cardano, Polygon, Polkadot, Chainlink, Avalanche and Solana.

FYI, .45 price now. That's a 400% increase from 1 week ago. That's going to get a lot of attention. We very well might push past $1 simply out of FOMO.

Looking at the Ripple chart from december 2017 when it was valued at $0.49 their MC was at $19.1B, that's almost 5 times the MC Radix currently has.

Just 1 month later they ended up at $3.3 (their ATH) at a MC of $130.5B, ranked #2. If Radix were to obtain that same momentum I wonder if we could go double the Ripple ATH or even higher in that same timeframe, given the supply difference and similarities of the price movement between both projects, then and now.

Mind you this is 4 years ago as well, crypto is moving alot faster now.

This token was also listed on a few more exchanges at the time including Binance but still an interesting comparison I think.

Staking rewards have been strong. Past month maybe 4k XRD which is now valued at $850 about. So making $200 a week or more in rewards is what I was hoping for. Radix can still be my retirement bag.

So does this quite big increase of price, x4 (from when it was around the $0,10 mark) finally put you in the green?

Not sure you want to wait till .15 again in these market conditions. Nov-Jan most of the market is gonna rally. I've been saying that since earlier in the year. This is where BTC pushes 80-100k, ETH pops into $7k range, and a lot of hype goes flying around to projects. I think overall market cap is gonna bust 50% or more within 3 months to $4T+.

IMHO the magic number is when Bitcoin hits $10T cap that it becomes mainstream globally. Can you explain why exactly Nov-Jan is gonna be when the market rallies? Is it based on trends in the past or?

Your probably right, but keep in mind a ton of people can't even exchange to exrd. And aint nobody trying to send over 30k+ to bitfinex at once.

I unstaked on the run up and am still finding a way to sell myself that doesn't involve taking 1month to dca out of it.

Will it actually only cost this much in ETH fees to move it to my Radix wallet, or am I misunderstanding something? Cuz the fee for swapping exrd to ETH in the Metamask wallet has always been much higher than this.

I still think Radix can hit 1 dollar easily by the end of year and considering no news has been announced yet, it's crazy price movement...

New exchange listing (potentially coinbase?), coin gecko are still yet to have accurate data, Scrypto... Can't wait to see this reflected in the price.

My current plan, hold for a few years and reap of the staking rewards which I believe is currently around 10%.

I think that on the long run Radix will have a good chance to go up by quite a bit. I am holding some myself, even though I am planning on buying some more.

Pretty sure that the price will decrease at some point, but I will keep holding. In the long run, we will all make some decent money off of it, I am sure about that.

My prediction would be that it has somewhat of a downfall after christmas. So far christmas time has always been a good time for crypto. That's why I don't think it will happen now that we are still close to it. Maybe drop by a few cents, but that's about it. After christmas I see it decrease by like 20-30%. That could change though, if it gets added by more big brokers.

If it gets added by more and more of them, I think it will only go up from there. No matter from which perspective you see it, Radix has some big potential in my eyes. But that is just my personal view on it. All I know for sure is that I am pretty excited to see what is going to happen. Who knows, maybe some of us will be rich in a few months?

Not yet. But I certainly can't sell while staking. Takes 2 weeks to un stake. I figure I'll need at least 10-20% of my holdings liquid (un staked) ready to sell for any new US based exchanges. Maybe Kucoin or Binance will add it soon. I may even sell to someone directly for a BTC/XRD swap.

Has anyone else been experiencing weird issues with our old validator node? I fully pulled my stake from our node on 9/17/2021, and on 10/6/2021 I delegated my full holdings to 4 different nodes. Yet, even though I've fully pulled my stake from HF's validator node and have redelegated it elsewhere, I still occasionally see this:

At seemingly random intervals, our old node still reports me as unstaking 131k Radix. This is incorrect, I've already fully unstaked. This happens off and on, all day long, probably happening slightly more often than it doesn't happen. Also, when this does happen, all of my balances start showing as double as the coins being "unstaked" get added to my total balance. This happens in the official radix wallet, in the radix explorer, and across many tools in the radix ecosystem (radixdashboard, staketracker, etc), so it doesn't have to do with my local set up. I've had others outside of the US query my wallet and they see the same thing I do, so it seems to be a network wide issue.

I'm getting tired of opening my wallet and seeing a balance that's 2x what it should be. It was fun/funny at first joking that I may actually get to keep it, now it's just misleading and makes me math every time I want to know exactly what I'm holding (assuming I'm looking while the error is occurring).

I've reached out to the telegram and the discord, but no useful info yet.

It's definitely a wallet still in beta. I haven't seen that particular issue though. It might be because the validator I believe was still running but we stopped updating it. I just stopped the node to be sure.

Do you have latest wallet too? v1.2.5

I'm on the latest wallet.

Just refreshed the explorer, and even with you stopping the node I'm still showing a total balance over double what my actual balance is due to 131k XRD unstaking from HF's node.

It's inconsistent though. When I posted my last reply, it showed an inaccurate total due to coins unstaking from HF's node. Then within 10 minutes it was accurate again and HF's node showed nothing unstaking. It stayed accurate for nearly 2 hours, however as of your latest reply, when I checked I am back at an inaccurate total.

Probably out of my hands. I've reached out to the team to make them aware.

I only unstaked 5% of my portfolio just in case. I have 2-3 members who want them from me. May even trade directly for eXRD.

Would be nice to realize some gains at 400-500%. I've unstaked a bit over half of my supply, but without the intention of selling. If I can find a buyer maybe I'd sell up to 20-25%, but I primarily did so to make a bet on OciSwap. The coins I left staked are already on pools that will earn Oci airdrops, and the coins that I just unstaked will be redelegated to Oci's new pool to earn a larger chunk of airdropped Oci.

Radix really needs to change how redelegating works. ~14 days to un stake is fine, but if all I'm doing is redelegating... make the penalty a few days, not two weeks. It's ridiculous... I'm still trying to do my part securing the network, don't punish me so harshly...

I think the 12 day point from reaching US $0.5 was about 4 days ago so I'd imagine quite a lot has been readily available for a few days. That's excluding the amounts unstaked on the rally up to $0.5

I'd imagine a slow decline to continue until we were closer to Alexandria. What are your thoughts?

I'm unsure. I haven't looked super closely at their plans yet, I'm not sure if someone is going to try to rush and put a product out in some capacity. Just got replies from both teams, looking at Babylon release for full functionality, Cerby will have other stuff available beforehand as highlighted below:

Right now Oci tokens exist on the Radix blockchain and that's it for their project.

Cerby has tokens on ETH, BSC, and Polygon. I'm unsure if they have a token on Radix yet. They have a bridge spanning the 3 networks and have staking in some capacity already live (I don't know returns). I'm fairly certain Cerby on ETH, BSC, and Polygon is a rebranding of an older project (DEFT\(?\)). The DEFT team merged their project with the CerbyMask developer, James, who had already been working on the 'metamask' of Radix, so now Cerby encompasses a swap, a browser based wallet, a bridge, and a platform for staking.

Oci is generating the hype through interactions on socials. Cerby seems to be the ambitious project trying to do it all.

At this point it's too early to tell if either of them will accomplish their goals.

It had no business being that high.

Radix's trade volume is still staggeringly low

It has close to no listings (although gate.io just began supporting XRD, another solution for non-Americans, albeit one I'd be wary of)

We still don't have smart contracts (although Alexandria brings us Scrypto in just a week)

And, we still are not on the radars of 99%+ of the market.

Radix is making the right plays, we're watching things come together nicely right now. Keep your heads down, keep showing the project support, buy those dips if it seems like a good play, and then hold on for a few years. Radix has potential.

I am paying close attention to RADIX since 2-3 months ago and been on their Tele group that long as well. Didn't sell before tokens being unlocked, didn't sell when it hit ATX on KuCoin as well. Many ShitCoins are getting published on top tier exchanges with no roadmap at all and no use-case just mainly based on hype and people throwing in cash in this BSC shit tokens for only one apparent reason, overnight millionaires. Radix has the potential to be in top 20-30 coins next year and if the team works just as hard throughout the entire 12 months just as they are working the past 2-3 months we will see Radix do minimum 40bil MCAP by end of next year. That's easy 20x-25x of the price. Buy the dips, heck, buy on a weekly basis even if there are no dips. Accumulate your bags because you know what they say, the HODLERS are the ones who reap the biggest rewards after some time :)

That's funny. People encrypting the memo to the exchange. I wouldn't do that unless I tested it with a small transaction first. btw, I love that feature and use it a lot. Gate.io though should be able to read their encrypted memos they receive. My guess is that devs will need to code that in just in case. A few things have changed.

1. The failure of the release. The team has shown they can't properly do a launch.
2. The failure of the token release. The team has shown they will make decisions for the whales.
3. The growth of competitors in the space they want to occupy. These competitors may be further along than Radix. There is a race which Radix appears unconcerned about.
4. One way bridge for ERC-20 (EXRD) to Radix. Total failure as there is not one exchange for US citizens.

Personally I still think the SEC needs to look hard at this. I was sold a security, I was asked for KYC. I am now stuck with these XRD without a viable way to sell them under market conditions. Now that pricing is below initial investment there is monetary damages some of us can claim against the Radix team. They better hope it goes above 20 cents soon.

Yeah but how much volume did you do? I can't imagine they'll let me trade $xx,xxx XRD without KYC. The risk ain't worth it for me. If it was $xxx I wouldn't worry but it's much more.

Radix nosediving today again another 20% under 10 cents now.

Around 10k usd but I did it in small portions over 2 weeks.

On multiple accounts and vpn's

Might ape back into radix around .08 then just stake it for the rest of college and forget about it.

I also did other deposits in this timeframe and had to contact support like 5 times because they kept losing my polygon.

I don't think exchange will be so fast.
There are bunch of high volume layer 1 still not yet get listed.
Layer 1 need time to do integration and testing.

I think their development is great. I think their market skills are horrible.

Sadly I agree we could be waiting a long long time for exchanges. And the fact a bunch of L1's are out there is a concern for me.

Quote:Not just this, I just don't see a point in listing until they uncap their network tps if it's still capped.

I disagree. We weren't sold on using Instabridge to convert eXRD into XRD just to stake and not have exchange participation. The TPS cap is irrelevant unless volume actually became a problem, which this early, it should not.

Maybe Radix team has development reasons to wait, or maybe it's simply a low priority for them. It would be nice if they gave us a more direct answer why Americans are stuck with XRD, that Bitfinex is the only exchange, and why it's taking so long for the XRD->eXRD bridge to open.

We're back at the pricing levels most of us got into at the group buy. So if you didn't get in and regretted it maybe now is a good moment. The rewards for staking are actually nice, but if you're in USA prepare to be forced to hold, potentially for years.

Even though I planned to hold for years anyways, when XRD hit over 40 cents I was planning on selling enough to recoup most of my initial investment. Then use that on other investments. Instead Americans are trapped.

My gripes won't matter if XRD hits $1 in 2-3 years. But if it goes to a penny, well, let's just say some people will have to answer for that. Don't think it will happen but it's always possible. Radix $1 in 2025 would be optimal.

Currently there's only two chains I can think of off-hand that follow proper institutional KYC/AML - ATOM and DOT -- but both of them are only partial KYC/AML and it's dependent on specific facets of their networks. The reality is that Radix being nearly entirely AML/KYC compliant is absolutely huge and crucial for institutional adoption in the USA and UK. You'd be surprised the amount of KYC/AML that goes into market making on a centralized level. This alone may be what strikes a different chord and gives XRD the leg up on a similar L1.

In accordance, from an institutional standpoint -- I think they're doing everything proper. They're advertising in a manner that will get them noticed by bankers, and they're treading lightly around particular things like "price talk" because they're attempting to do everything by the book.

I think as long as we break out of the current cycle of downwards pressure, Radix has the opportunity to hit $1 by EOY, if all cards are played right. Being a top 50 coin on CMC by MCap puts them at roughly $0.70. I think this is fairly conservative.

I give it at most 6 months from now and we'll have a bridge back to ETH.

INCREDIBLE - February 26, 2022, 12:14 am

I'm using Bitfinx without KYC to trade XRD:BTC for the last 6 months and it's working well. I sent all my eXRD to Bitfinex because if you have to keep them in eXRD; you're at least losing staking benefits irrespective of being from the US. I don't recommend waiting for Instapass bridge at all.

about the trust and hodl. I believe XRD is going to be the best investment we bought cheaply in a few years to come. I myself purchased 125k eXRD at 12-15 cents. but they could always use some marketing to gain the trust of their investors and become a part of the whole crypto bubble framework.

crypto is more like a gamble to the investors. everyone wants to get rich quickly. you can't change this fact just like that. so until you cannot; be a part of it.

This is what, the 3rd person we've seen in charge of marketing for Radix since HF started following Radix?

And this is what, pretty much the 3rd time we've seen this exact same "push" towards marketing?

I'm out of faith that Radix can figure the marketing front out. If Radix takes off, it's because a big name stumbles across it and tips others off themselves, not because Radix has made a good push towards marketing.

Friendly reminder to review the nodes you're staked to. The last 30-60 days we've seen quite a few nodes increase their fee to stake with them. The #1 pool (for a long time, I think Oci dethroned them recently) increased their fee from 0% to 5%, and many other pools have moved into the 2%-3.5% range. It's never a bad idea to support your node operators, just want to make sure it's not happening unknowingly.

I actually had a node go "unregistered" which I believe means I wasn't getting rewards. I try to look at least every other week at the wallet.

Seems even smarter to split up your staking into 10 nodes. Unstaking is 2 weeks of lost rewards. I don't like in the wallet they don't show you rewards in history.

It's funny to look in the wallet and see the transaction messages. The ones for advertising are kind of cool. Like this one: <https://www.artistizen.com/>

TLDR;

"So with that, Babylon begins at the end of Q4 2022, with the final mainnet migration completing by the end of Q1 2023."

But basically this project has so much development. Big question is where will the market be and especially will a competitor beat them out? This almost feels like one of those projects which just never finishes their project. And I know development always continues but I'm talking about getting out of Beta releases into Production. I would certainly not consider Radix even close to production worthy yet.

Until then I guess we earn rewards and pray it holds value, which it has not btw.

Another year and I guess we'll know if the 2-3 year buy-in wait was worth it.

This was my issue with Cardano. It isn't enough to have a great concept that you're working towards, no matter how successful you are along the way. The bottom line is this is a race. This is a race to get people building. You don't have people building, then there's no draw to your ecosystem.

Cardano is creating a fantastic product, but at this point... why use it? Other chains have had people building on them for years now. Other chains are cheaper. Other chains are faster. What draw is there to start building on a ready and completed Cardano when you could have been building on AVAX or FTM or ETH or SOL or a number of other chains? Why choose Cardano with their small [DeFi] ecosystem when you have billions locked into other chains already?

I have the same concern with Radix. By the time Radix is ready, there's going to be dozens of other networks with billions of dollars locked in to their ecosystems. These ecosystems may not be as fast, they may not be as cheap, but they'll be fast enough and cheap enough (For example, AZERO has Radix beat in both departments and should have smart contracts before Radix too, although it doesn't scale as well). It's going to be difficult to pull money and talent away from already established ecosystems and convince them to start building in an ecosystem with no certainty in its future. Radix has a ton of potential (If it achieves what it claims it will), but the vast majority of my concern rests solely on whether or not we're ever going to draw in the builders. Radix has proven to have quite a few talented developers already floating around its ecosystem, the OG's seem to all have some sort of developer in their back pockets, so that's been nice to see. Lets hope this ecosystem keeps growing.

My biggest hope is that Radix is trying to time that moment when we leap from a $2T market cap to $100T. A financial ecosystem that's 50 times today's market is coming within 5 years. They seem to be preparing for the ultimate scenario of DeFi being the center of all finances. I believe in that vision and I believe that nearly all existing blockchains don't meet the needs that will be required.

It's an absolute gamble though that Radix can pull it off and my resolve has been shaken the past year with their many missteps. Still, I am all-in with a pair of 10's on a huge pot again a full table.

So basically US investors have been trapped for 6 months but as soon as Bitfinex has issues Dan says its 'unacceptable' and pulls multiple tier 2 exchange listings out of his a? I like the project but the way they handle these situations is atrocious. I really don't understand the favoritism going on.

This doesn't seem to be correct.

The other day an American friend had mentioned trading [an irrelevant coin] on this platform so I decided to sign up and test.

My IP wasn't flagged, I was honest on all forms, submitted a US ID, and I was approved / verified.

As a test, I deposited $10 XRD, converted it to USDT, converted that to LTC, then withdrew the LTC. There was no problem with this process.

Two notes to make:

As another commenter mentioned, liquidity does suck here, the order books are pretty empty. The TOS for P2PB2B puts them in a position where they can kind of fuck your account at any point for being an American. Do not hold funds here.

Just a heads up. I've been using RadixPortfolio for a while now and my biggest disappointment was it does not collect historical data for your address. If you become a gold member today, you'll only see data for today and onward, nothing before today. I have a couple Radix addresses and Radix Portfolio, while helpful, was also a bit of a nightmare to set up across all addresses and start obtaining useful data. That being said, it's the best available tool for this right now afaik. They're improving month after month though. Dev is a good dude.

edit: (One of the "Scans" sites (xrdscore or radixscore) also has some features locked behind staking with them. In their case it is not worth doing. They don't offer you anything useful)

I've never used XT before but their volume seems solid (or fake). Either way, here is an exit for those who want out.

Good news. I also looked at the volume, looks really strange considered they are ranked #29 on cmc but have more volume than for example crypto.com or Kucoin.

Also great that XT allows USA Users

That's what I had noticed as well, for an exchange I had never heard of it had higher volume than Kucoin.

Could be the exchange fabricating volume to look good / show up higher in rankings.

Could be that token owners have identified XT as prime platform for faking trade volume, and have set up bots on XT to elevate their tokens daily trade volume.

Seems to just be large coins

I deposited a small amount of Radix to test this (~$100) and was able to withdraw without issues. Withdraw limit is $500 a day without KYC, which goes up to $2000 with "Level 1 verification" and $1,000,0000 with "Level 2 verification" whatever that means. Volume is dogshit so much that at the moment it trades significantly below the Bitfinex price. Their UI is really weird or at least was to me, XRD deposited instantly but it said it requires 6 confirmations and when I checked it it would say I only had 1 confirmation and the link to the transaction took me to an explorer page for a "Not found" transaction. Then for some reason you had to transfer it from the wallet balance to the spot balance then do the trading then back to the wallet to withdraw. Regardless everything ultimately worked and I was able to withdraw LTC but I wouldn't use this exchange personally.

Thanks for the information!

I suspected the volume would be low with it being a pretty unknown exchange, but I do hope it changes as more people have had time to use it, at least slightly. I never expect these low tier exchanges to have a lot of volume, but if it allows an avenue for at least a partial exit at a minimal loss in the event of an emergency, I'll take it. It also means they're running a Radix node, so they can support Radix tokens and maybe we can start building a bit of an ecosystem and some volume there.

We have P2PB2B available to us as well, I tested that it works, but same thing, the volume is horrendous.

I actually believe that the next halvening is almost perfectly timed together with Xi'an. And because of this I believe it could explode like Cardano did or beyond.

However like some people here have mentioned, perhaps by that time Radix will have been surpassed. Though as advanced as the technology is I don't think that will happen. But time is indeed of the essence.

Agreed. Their token unlock was a failure imho. The inflation to their market cap is misleading and only placed it into a position of appearing over-valued. Maybe it didn't matter and we'd still be in this position, but I thought the unlock only served the whales who took immediately control over the validators.

From Piers in an email today...

Quote:The sudden de-pegging of UST and the resultant hyperinflation of Luna continues to have ramifications for the wider crypto market. These market echos are going to keep coming - we have not yet seen the full pain that this is going to inflict, both to teams that used UST as part of their treasury (we did not, and do not speculate with our team treasury), as well as the hostile regulatory response that could occur.

However, all is not doom and gloom - the purpose of open source code is not to create perfect code the first time, but to iterate towards something safe, resilient and reliable. The same is true with the open source financial system that everyone in the DeFi/Web3.0 industry is currently building. The end goal of the system is the same - safe, resilient and reliable finance - one that presents an open platform for anyone to use and compete for a global audience.

These times are the times when we learn the most, filter for what has worked and what is probably not going to work, and then rebuild something better. The 2017 ICO boom taught us the importance of secondary market liquidity. The 2022 DeFi crash is teaching us the dangers of self-referencing systems and leverage.

The difference between a bull market and a bear market has always fascinated me. Major innovations in the crypto space only really seem to come out during bear markets. I am a huge fan of the concept of Deep Work - a thing that is only possible when the noise of the outside world is reduced so that slower, deeper thoughts can emerge. I have high conviction that these market cycles are a huge contributing factor to making Deep Work possible for great teams working in the crypto space.

Having gone through roughly three bull/bear cycles now, this period is actually exciting for me. While capital drives the markets over the short term, it is real value creation that drives the markets over the long term. As Radix has always been built around long term value creation, this feels like a massive opportunity as the next cycle is where I feel like Radix is going to be in an incredibly strong position for the next phase of DeFi and Web 3.0 - a position that has only been possible after years and years of building and testing - plus the phenomenal Scrypto and Radix community.

Scrypto and the Radix Engine keep exceeding expectations, and we are already seeing the first glimmers of what can truly be achieved with a usable set of tools for building DeFi. In my (biased) opinion, the next year is going to be a bumper year for the next wave of innovation for users of DeFi and Web 3.0 - all powered by Radix.

Super exciting time to be alive.

Quote:DEVELOPMENT (RUSSELL HARVEY, CTO & MATTHEW HINE, CPO)

With Scrypto v0.4.1 behind us and the Olympia coordinated forking update in the final stages, the focus for the tech team has shifted to paving the way for the Babylon Alphanet. That means marrying up the Java-based node to the Rust-based Radix Engine v2. There's a ton of heavy lifting to do here, and we have just concluded a lengthy design session on how the pieces of the system will talk to each other, including what portions of the node will be immediately moving to a Rust implementation.

Related to that design session, node runners can expect to continue to run the JVM through Babylon release, and at some point post-Babylon but pre-Xi'an there will be a shift to a fully native binary compiled from Rust.

In Scrypto news, we have seen a tremendous uptick in developer activity since the Lisbon developer event and the release of v0.4. It is heartening to see how welcoming and helpful the community has been to all the newcomers, and gratifying to watch the old-timers who have already adopted the asset-oriented programming mindset sharing good design patterns when newer devs come in with a Solidity-style approach to a problem. It's hard to believe that Alexandria released less than six months ago and we're already this far along as a community.

Keep building, and keep the interesting use cases coming! We love watching the lightbulb go on over someone's head when the asset-oriented way of doing things suddenly clicks.

They're always so dry with details on their actual product. They'll talk about anything and everything, unless it's about Radix's development.

Our Brave takeover revealed that the campaign engine can rev when necessary. Alongside the huge influx of website traffic, the campaign had a massive impact on the Brave audience. Here are some of the highlights:

:eyes: 49 million Impressions

:world_map: Overall awareness of Radix increased 28% on Brave since our takeover. That's an additional 2.5m people on their first step of their #RadixRevelation, with more than half of Brave users recalling seeing our ads.

:facepunch: When asked, "Which Layer 1 will have the biggest impact on the financial system?" Radix was selected 8% following the takeover, now scoring equally to the Fantom Network.

:thought_bubble: Radix's brand perception increased significantly post-campaign, with 20% of Brave's audience now believing that we might have the best technology of all Layer 1 protocols.

:hammer_and_spanner: 1 in 5 Brave users consider themselves a developer and since our takeover campaign, more than 33% of developers on Brave would consider building on Radix

Yep, it's nice to see these projects coming to fruition now rather than later, I didn't see it coming at all. Compared to the other swap currently operating in a similar capacity, Caviar's feels nicer to use.

Caviar team is my favorite team in the Radix ecosystem. After HF's node went down I put 80% of my stake into their nodes and started hanging out in their chat. They helped me out setting up my first Radix node expecting nothing in return, they're good dudes. They also operate Radit.io, another interesting project on Radix.

We're now at a loss from the buy in. We got in near 10 cents. Now we're down to 7 cents. 30% loss and potentially more downside coming. Kind of angry when I think about the fact I couldn't sell when prices were good. If I lose this investment, I am kind of screwed. Gonna lose a year salary at least. It was a gamble I guess. As usual my own advice to others was probably best, buy Bitcoin, hold, and STFU. But we all chase those bags of gold. It could have worked out but I'm fearing this might be my single worst investment ever. Even worse, I still can't cash out at the loss.

I hope regulators look into what Radix did.

Radix is ded... for now

I hope they deliver their promises, otherwise it might die like a shitcoin.

Anyways I still have some hope in the developing team, see you guys in the next bullrun

As long as they have enough fund for the roadmap and deliver their promise. It is fine. They are still doing good in recent event with 200k views on Scrypto video. I'm holding until next bullrun.

Tesseract.mk - June 13, 2022, 1:42 am

Radix is bleeding just like everything else, there's not been any FUD reasons as to why.

Nothing has changed, still bulliish, still have a large bag of Radix staked. Piers addressed the bear market the other day and how it would affect the teams ability to continue developing, and pretty much said they would be unaffected. I'll link the video below, it's the first question he answered - question answered at 0.50 mark.

Trade volume is real rough

XRD:

BitFinex - $40,000

eXRD:

Uniswap - $33,000

KuCoin - $23,000

Hoo - $25,000

MexC is the only exchange reporting any decent volume. $292,000 for XRD and $85,000 for eXRD.

I can't find a good graph for this. Radix lacks good network dashboards still.

Just this year:

Patrick Jane - July 11, 2022, 11:32 am

I'd say Radix still lacks a use case at least up until Babylon as well as proper exchanges. Scripto still being in beta. Then there's the 30% of the supply that is also staked. The market also bleeding still on top of that.

If you take a look at a couple of days before the november surge, the volume was even worse then than it is today and it still made its way up to $0,65.

I just think that whenever the market picks back up so will Radix.

I actually wanted to investigate that figure earlier, so thank you for bringing it up. 30% is low.

I'm hopeful that Radix will thrive post-babylon, we seem to be setting up a solid ecosystem already. However, there's a lot of time between now and then, and with 70% of the supply liquid, we could suffer some painful events.

Omniscient - July 11, 2022, 1:33 pm

Transactions per day was mentioned. How many of those are staking rewards I wonder? Radix is still far from usable imho. I guess the current value could be worse given the market condition. At least it has maintained top 100 market cap even though I'm not exactly sure how.

I'd be very surprised if nothing happens post Xi'an together with the halvening. I just think it's too strong of a combination.

We've entered a period of time where new layer ones with some new accompanying programming language seem to be popping up monthly. These aren't weak copy and paste chains either, they're strong contenders for the upcoming years. I think over-saturation of strong L1's should be considered as another risk. There's a lot of strong up and coming alternatives, and if Radix take their time reaching Xi'an, then I fear the amount of people who care about solving the blockchain trilemma will dwindle as people begin utilizing and finding homes on chains that already function at an acceptable level.

I consider competition from other potentially stronger L1's to be the main risk to Radix. The second risk is them just not developing fast enough, which actually is the same risk really.

What other risk is there really? I suppose that you could say it's possible they fully develop on-time and no one cares enough, bad marketing. But that just doesn't seem plausible.

In a way maybe this bear market buys Radix more time to develop before the next bull cycle. Just hoping they catch it with good timing and XRD hits $1-$2.

Competition definitely plays a part, but I don't believe it does in the short term. Even if something would outperform Radix technology and / or adoption wise, I'm still confident that the price will go up nonetheless just because of the hype and potential it has. The market always tends to reward high quality projects short term. Long term however it just comes down to which projects the developers and investors choose.

Some examples: XLM, NEO, IOTA and XRP. They all had amazing price action in 2017 but they never reached their old ATH's in this last bull run.

For this reason I believe that XRD could have a guaranteed road to $3-$7. What happens after that solely depends on who outperforms who.

They really need more technical / developer focused material like this.

It's been a year now and I still know very little about crypto and how capable it may be. We have an echo chamber of idiots preaching it's the greatest thing ever, but I've never been exposed to any solid, low-level, technical discussion on crypto, and how it stacks up against anything but solidity.

Praying it pumps back over .20. I also just moved a bunch of tokens back onto my web3 Z3us wallet and did a lot of liquidity swaps. For the Floop/XRD I'm 10% of the pool. Big gamble I know but WTF, why not?

Really enjoying their swap sites. Used them to make a couple dozen transactions really quickly and easily.

Suggest members look into OCI and Caviar asap. Might be movers going forward. Trade volume going up.

<https://ociswap.com/>

<https://caviarswap.io/>

<https://app.dsor.io/>

These pools keep growing. If Radix can keep up the low-fee, instant swaps, and high transaction volume then it's going to do really well in DeFi. Which has always been our hope.

Hi all,

I currently have a bunch of eXRD, just completed the verification on instapass but yet to begin the swap to XRD.

Any "downside" to converting it to XRD? My purpose is to begin the staking journey instead of just letting sit in my wallet.

Both eXRD & XRD seems to have similar amount of exchange to trade too

Only downside is no easy way to sell in the US without risking going through Bitfinex with a VPN. KuCoin listing for XRD is coming soon though, so not too much of an issue.

If it's a long term plan, then definitely worth swapping to XRD and staking for rewards.

The way I look at it is that we're literally emulating the last bear markets timeline. We're in a very similar position as in Oct 2018 and bottomed just 2 months later, and I believe we're following the same pattern here. We won't see a much lower price than the current Honestly you missed out on a huge amount of XRD by not immediately swapping from the eXRD ERC-20 token. The staking rewards were very good and you missed out on Floop ($400+) and other drops. Plus the early opportunity for liquidity on some platforms.

I believe I have earned 20-25% XRD since I began staking.
