Thread: Have the police seized my operations?

ThatDevAaron - November 27, 2021, 8:57 am

So for anyone not familiar with my case, this is a link to the thread:

<https://hackforums.net/showthread.php?tid=6170614>

Now, I have one question, does this mean my service operations MUST be halted, legally, or, do they need to explicitly seize operations?

I AM YET TO BE OFFICIALLY CHARGED WITH ANYTHING.

WE ORIGINALLY HAD TO HALT OPERATIONS BECAUSE THEY SEIZED MY WALLETS ETC AND WE COULDN'T PAY FOR HOSTING AND OUR SOURCE CODE WAS LOCATED ON ONE OF THE DEVICES THAT WAS SEIZED.

Nostre - November 27, 2021, 9:28 am

They most likely didn't halt your operation manually because they're gathering more evidence towards you. If I were you, I would halt things on your end until the case is dropped. I would also contact a good lawyer and get a consultation rather than ask this forum. I don't believe anyone can give you a correct answer.

Na fuck a lawyer they don't understand this cyber shit ??? my last lawyer tried drop that the police can 'hack into my electrum wallet without the keys etc' - the system is rigged against us cyber warriors.

My platform is a legitimate business, what would it say about us if we fold as soon as the police start sniffing. Their witch hunts won't draw fear to me.

Plus the police/government is always watching you.

We all here have seen this type of activity here before and it never turns out good for the OP. Lawyer up and fix your own issues for we can't help you.

agreed, it's honestly suck if I was op I would ask Omni to temp close and remove all threads till further notice.

strol - November 27, 2021, 12:58 pm

In your original thread I came under the impress that they don't actually care about you but rather someone you might be in connection with. I feel as though they probably haven't halted your operations but are keeping a very close eye on you. You cannot make any slip ups, or you will be targeted again by them.

As everyone else has said, invest into a lawyer. Nobody but a legal counsel can help you at this point with this, and personally I wouldn't trust anyone but a lawyer to help me with this anyways

Have you tried specifically searching for a lawyer that specializes in your situation? Fighting the feds is an extremely complicated process.

Monero-chan - November 27, 2021, 2:56 pm

Get yourself a lawyer that specializes in cybercrime or something similar. There is little to nothing we can do to help you, other to recommend lawyers.

Livewire - November 27, 2021, 3:42 pm

They're probably still building their case as a couple others have said. If you're in the situation to keep going without doing anything else potentially illegal just keep going. Won't really hurt the final outcome.

I kinda skimmed the other thread too, and I'm just curious: you seem certain that you're innocent, but how are you so certain? I'm not being rhetorical, I'm genuinely asking - have they accused you/charged you with something very specific that you didn't do?

Because we're all guilty of something, ya know, going 35 in a 30 zone, torrenting a movie in 2009, drinking from an open container in a public place etc, none of us can be entirely certain that we haven't done something technically illegal, even police officers. Can't say much for obvious reasons.

But firstly, in the interview they discussed extortion/blackmail related events, and they believe my legitimate business to be oriented toward criminal activity, which I think is a bold statement.

But I can't say more on these things for now.

Fair enough, and if they're saying things like your business is oriented towards criminal activity, that is a pretty bold statement if they have nothing to back it up. Might be they're just seeing if you'll panic and tell them something.

+1, I've went no comment throughout the first interview, however I managed to get out of them their possibly planning a second interview, which was a big win on my part because I was expecting to either be charged or the case being dropped, not another interview, so I've had months to prepare.

Similar rules are in the UK too.

The difference is, we don't provide any illegal 'ddos vectors', such as Amplification/Reflection Attacks (essentially spoofing your IP ADDRESS as your target's, sending data to 10s of thousands of random servers and have them send the response to the target, essentially overwhelming them), botnets (particularly with illegally obtained devices); We're partnered with a hosting provider that owns their hardware and has given us permission to send our tests, and we have put in place a public test ledger <https://stressing.ninja/ledger> (idk if im allowed to share my link, but im not sharing it in a malicious way to evade rules) which allows anyone to view all live outgoing tests on the network (last 100 tests) and we provide a GET API to lookup any tests sent to an IP:PORT (cross reference hashes).

We also will respond to all abuse reports and put in place 'host blacklists' to prevent further tests to a network, without charge, as we've done for years.

“You can't arrest me, it says in my TOS that I'm not responsible for what clients do on my ddos for hire site”

Our TOS says nothing of the sort, obviously, to some extent, we'll always be liable. The fact is, we're a service much needed, we allow individuals and providers to test their networks so that their not affected by common vectors, without services like ours, including the less than legitimate ones, network security would be appalling, and that is a fact (Stressing Ninja ONLY PROVIDES TESTS COMING DIRECTLY FROM OUR NETWORK).
