Honestly I wouldn't say I have ever received a terrible gift just cause someone's put in the effort to get me something in the first place. However the least used gift I have ever gotten was a pair of PJs, I don't really wear PJs.

My girl (met her a couple months ago) got me this Champion sweater, and I absolutely love it. It's warm and cozy and definitely my style.

I remember as a kid I would always get underwear and be so embarrassed by it that it became a yearly thing.

Honestly the worst single gift I ever got was from an ex. I got a blue ray copy of some comedy movie that I can't remember and a superhero t shirt that came in a matching lunchbox. I did not own a blue ray player and I for some reason cannot stand super hero movies / cartoon graphic tees.

I've never received a terrible gift. My boss does a thing where he will offer up a gift/imply its yours to keep, let you have it, then come back and take it from you two days later.

Probably thats the closest thing.

What is that about? I had some type of seal a plastic bag gift that I didn't know what it was so I gave it away.

Idk, my job requires a lot of tools. My company pays for my tools, and he does a lot of drugs. I think he forgets.

I honestly never received a bad gift, and if I did I wouldn't of think of it like , as it's still something I didn't have first lol

Lol, he sounds like a tool. So he like, gives you something as a gift, then a couple of days later he just comes and takes it back from you? Why don't you offer him 50k for his car, then when he asks for the money, tell him that you paid him already, does he not remember?

I don't know about worst gift, but my grandfather used to give me a lump of coal for christmas. My mum was welsh, all her ancestors were coal miners, it was like a comedy tradition for men in her family to open their christmas stocking and all they got was a piece of coal and an orange.

The grandpa got me a speaker that looked like a corona can. Completely useless to me
