We will be screening all applications, and reaching out to setup zoom calls with potential candidates.

On the zoom call you will be asked some additional questions, along with providing some examples of recent work, and how you would approach a task.

From there if we feel you might be a good fit we will hire you to build something for us (paid), and if all goes well we can look at the possibility of hiring on part/full time for the position.

Thank you and hope to see your submission.

gathering people's personal informations and setting up zoom calls on a so called "hack" forums seems kinda odd if you ask me.

If not interested no need to reply.

The forum also has many talented programmers that also provide legitimate programming. My company is looking for some talented programmers and designers.

Why not reach out where i see talent.

If you wish not to go through an interview process then it might not be for you.

But it is a process, and need to learn about a individual applying not going to just hire someone on a whim.

Only personal information is that of a email address to reach out to them applying..
