Thread: NFT Trading changed my life

SIM-5049184 - January 23, 2022, 10:21 am

I'm an average computer science college student, I got into crypto in 2017 in pump and dump groups and have been around the scene for years. My returns were never stellar, just enough for me to keep doing it. This year I told myself I'd change my life with it and so far it has been. I got into solana nft's through a call group here and expanded myself further into the scene and started making some big connections. My returns from it are nearly 10x what I made off trading alt-coins for 5 years. As a freshman in college the money is crazy nice to have.

Remember, a good connection is worth an infinite amount of money.

Can't wait to see where this year takes me to ?

Hey, I'm in a similar position that you were in. Care to offer some advice / your favorite services?

Pikzul - February 20, 2022, 3:11 pm

I wish I had the patience to learn how it all works.

My favorite advice for services is that if calls were good people wouldn't be selling them.

Learn the space through observation instead of interaction when you are starting.

If you wanna make money in NFTs it's a lot more about who you know than what you know

Do pump and dump groups work for real? I thought of joining some but when they say you have to use a certain platform for it to work, I get sus.

Pump and dump groups aren't a thing in nft's unless you have a dao full of very rich people and a majority of the time in solana the way it goes is that we don't dump the project we take it very far. Fuji Lions for example was the work of my dao.

CryptoExchanger - February 27, 2022, 7:57 am

Congradulations on the success

Not nft's I meant cryptos in general

Absolutely, people in dao's use eachother as exit liq, why wouldn't they? Twitter influencers, youtubers, exit liq junkies

I'm not an influencer, I use the market like everyone else I sell where I think I should.

Having connections in any space you are in is the key for sure.

Next step is having enough connections to make your own NFT nowadays with enough capital to invest into devs and designers and enough connections you can make a ton of money.
