Thread: How do I find an API of a specific store?

virseptgoddess97 - January 26, 2022, 11:18 pm

Someone is creating a bot for me and they said they need the stores API, and I have no idea how to get that. Can anyone help?

Man, look:

if I told You:

"I called a professional to fix My problem and he asked for me to bring the needed tools as he can't bring them from home, Guys what tools do I need to bring???", what would You think?

You would think "what the f is this guy talking about, how am I supposed to know what type of tools (API keys) he needs if he doesn't even state what type of bot, what's the purpose and what niche(store?????) is he talking about"

You need to learn to format Your questions better, this is a general hack to allow You to find stuff on google, I don't have problems helping You but it's been 2h since You posted and many more till You'll see a reply, it would be best for You to learn how to ask questions correctly in order for You to be able to obtain a correct answer from google instantly.

if Anything has API's it means it has also a documentation, if it has a documentation it is well indexed on google.

the probability of someone having done exactly what You might want to do is close to 0 if multiplied by the amount of people that will see this thread, this means that anyone that is willing to help You will google it on google anyway and the only difference between You and that person is the knowledge on how to format the question correctly.
