aha looks like you've recently started using brave?
good job!

Melted - February 2, 2022, 3:28 pm

I initially downloaded Brave in 2017, but uninstalled it to then reinstall Firefox soon after. Reinstalled Brave around the same time as you did, I definitely don't regret it. Sidenote; I dual boot Qubes OS & Windows, my main being Windows (sadly) for work & gaming.

I have been using Opera browser, but what do you feel is so special about Brave?

I have used both Opera and Brave before. I personally prefer Brave as it performs better in general, provides the option to browse with Tor, and has other useful privacy-oriented features. Opera definitely has better user functionality features, but Brave's superior privacy and security is more important to me than user functionality.

Great reply thanks for filling me in on some details I wasn't aware of. I will have to check it out, but it is always tough for me to change anything up. I used to be a diehard Firefox in my early years, then Chrome, and now Opera.

Honestly, it really depends on what you're doing on the browser. Opera is more convenient to use, Brave is more secure. I'm on the road to completely ditching google from my personal computer, using Brave with DuckDuckGo has allowed me to do that with few problems.

I used to use Google Chrome thinking it was the best, but not understanding how resource hungry the browser is, and how many issues it has overall with security.

Almost any browser is an improvement from Google Chrome. Alternatives to Opera (rather than Brave) would be: Firefox with customized security settings (arguably better than Brave), and GNU Icecat (another Gecko-based browser, open source & privacy oriented). An honorable mention is Tor, but I believe it is not for your average user; very secure yet slow.

Indeed, I had it downloaded for a few months but just started using it as my main browser today.

I'm sure there are many more useful things other than the Silk Road that Tor is used for.

its just alot of use aint it, you can increase the amount of ads you get, sometimes i click on the ads, which probably also help.

Mr. Robot - February 4, 2022, 4:13 pm

I've reset this PC a few times but also have my bedroom PC with about the same.

Sky - February 4, 2022, 4:15 pm

I just started using Brave about 4 days ago. Really liking it so far.

(Feb 4, 2022 05:14 PM)Lowkey Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) So technically what you're saying is that I have MORE blocked ads then you?

Robot - 0

Black Cat - 1

Yeah most likely, but then again I have youtube premium which means I don't get ads from there - unless you do too.

If you don't then even just after the most recent reset, my stats would smack yours :)

It's way better than Mozilla, just a few lines below chrome IMO.

It seems to run smoother than chrome, and you can earn crypto while you browse the web!

Yes its better from mozilla but from chrome I think its almost 1:1

Rahul007rhp - February 4, 2022, 11:38 pm

Using it for approx 1.5 months & im struggling even to get my 1st BAT token. Earned 0.5 BAT so far on 10 ads per day setting.

And making sure to click every ada that pop up.

TomHack - February 5, 2022, 12:11 am

How to withdraw BAT from Brave?

I was hear that Brave browser paying crypto for using it. Is it secure using Brave browser to login on some personal account?
